PREFACE.

IN preparing for the press a new edition of “Lumley” the most difficult problem which the Editors had to face was that of space. The two volumes of the previous edition had practically reached the permissible limit, and the interval of six years had seen added to the Statute Book some twenty Acts of Parliament which called for notice more or less full—one of them, at any rate, the Housing, Town Planning, etc., Act, 1909, being a measure of considerable length and importance; moreover, the output of Statutory Rules and Orders and Departmental Circulars has shown little (if any) sign of decrease, and judicial decisions upon points connected with Public Health and Local Government Law multiply at an average rate not far short of 100 per annum.

In order to save space for the inclusion of new matter certain alterations have been made: provisions relating only to Scotland and Ireland have been omitted, and also such repealed sections as afford no assistance in construing the existing law; the regnal years and chapters of statutes referred to in the notes are no longer added to the short titles; the citations of cases are restricted to two sets of reports; and certain well-recognised abbreviations have been used in citing both statutes and cases. The Table of Cases will, however, supply references to the other reports of any decision, and from the Table of Statutes a reader will readily find the regnal year and chapter of any statute cited by its short title.

The whole of the notes in Volume I. have been carefully reconsidered with a view to economising space as well as to insuring accuracy ; many of the longer ones, indeed, have been rearranged and to a great extent rewritten. It would, no doubt, have been possible to still further condense many of the notes by merely stating the principles apparently deducible from the decisions cited ; but the Editors were reluctant to depart from the plan of giving in some detail the facts of the various cases, having regard to the fact that the book is often used in places where law reports are not easily procurable, and by readers who find it helpful to see how general principles have been applied by the Courts in concrete instances.

In Volume II. the Brine Pumping (Compensation for Subsidence) Act, 1891, has been omitted as being a measure of a local character, and the number of new Orders and Regulations having statutory force has made it necessary to exclude certain explanatory Circulars ; it is believed, however, that everything of value in them will be found in the notes to the various Acts and Orders to which they relate.

It was obviously impossible to deal with such subjects as Old Age Pensions and Mental Deficiency—if, indeed, they could be regarded as falling within the term “ Public Health ”—and only those sections of the National Insurance Act which directly affect sanitary authorities as such have been printed ; nor was it feasible to deal any more fully than in former editions with the earlier Burial and Highway Acts. Even so, a slight increase in bulk has been inevitable ; but the Editors venture to hope that, notwithstanding this fact, the present edition will be found to fulfil satisfactorily the purpose for which it is primarily designed, viz., that of supplying a reliable and self-contained text-book on the powers and duties of district councils.

Special attention has been paid to the annotation of the Housing and Town Planning provisions, and to the revision of those notes which deal with the practice of the Local Government Board ; it is believed that they may be relied upon by officials as being thoroughly up to date.

The Milk and Dairies Bill, 1914, made its appearance at a time when the printing of the edition was far advanced and when it was impossible to delay publication on the chance of its becoming law. Should it do so, the existing Dairies Orders in Appendix II. will doubtless be replaced in due course by more comprehensive ones, but it will (as drafted) have no effect upon the statutes included in Volume I. beyond repealing three sub-sections in the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, 1886.

As regards case law, it is hoped that all cases reported down to July 3rd will be found in the book ; and the decision of the House of Lords in Local Government Board v. Arlidge given on July 20th has also been included. The latest Order noticed is the Tuberculosis Order of June 23rd.

Readers are invited to send to the publishers notes of any errors and suggestions for improvement of the book.

(38 & 39 VICT. c. 55.)

An Act for consolidating and amending the Acts relating to Public Health in England.

Preliminary.

1. This Act may be cited as “The Public Health Act, 1875.”

Short title.

This Act is for the most part a consolidation Act, repealing all previous statutes relating to the Public Health, and re-enacting them with certain amendments. The observations of BRETT, J., in R. v. Prince (1875), L. R. 2 C. C. R. 154 ; 39 J. P. 676, as to construing the language used in consolidation statutes, may be usefully referred to. Adverting to the use of several words or forms of expression applicable to statutory offences, he observes : “They are but differences in form ; and though they be all, or though several of them be, in one consolidating statute, they are not to be construed by contrast.” Then he quotes Greaves on the Criminal Law Consolidation Acts, p. 3 : “If any question should arise in which any comparison may be instituted between different sections of any one or several of these Acts, it must be carefully borne in mind in what manner these Acts were framed. None of them was re-written ; on the contrary, each contains enactments taken from different Acts passed at different times, and with different views and frequently varying from each other in phraseology ; and, for reasons stated in the introduction, these enactments for the most part stand in these Acts with little or no variation in their phraseology, and consequently their differences in that respect will be found generally to remain in these Acts. It follows, therefore, that any argument as to a difference in the intention of the legislature which may be drawn from difference in the terms of one clause from those in another will be entitled to no weight in the construction of such clauses ; for that argument can only apply with force where an Act is framed from beginning to end with one and the same view, and with the intention of making it thoroughly consistent throughout.” This judgment assumes that the meaning of any particular phrase in any particular section of a consolidating statute is not to be limited by its meaning in some other section, but must be determined with reference to the particular subject matter dealt with in the particular section.

In Higgs and Hill, Ltd. v. Stepney Borough Council, [1914] 1 K. B. 505 ; 78 J. P. 134, CHANNELL, J., said : “When you find an inconsistency in the clauses of a consolidating Act, it may be proper to look at the respective dates of their first enactment to explain that inconsistency ; but if there is no inconsistency, the court must interpret the Act as it stands without any regard to the dates of origin of its clauses.”

“When once certain words in an Act of Parliament have received judicial construction in one of the superior courts and the legislature has repeated them without any alteration in a subsequent statute, I conceive that the legislature must be taken to have used them according to the meaning which a court of competent jurisdiction has given to them" (Ex parte Campbell (1870), L. R. 5 Ch. 703, per JAMES, L.J., at p. 706). See also Barlow v. Teal (1884), 15 Q. B. D. 403, per Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., at p. 405. In Mitchell v. Simpson (1890), 25 Q. B. D. 183, Lord ESHER said: "The Act (Sheriffs Act) of 1887 is a consolidation Act, and the provision in question is in substantially the same terms as that of the Act of Geo. 2, and therefore in order to determine the meaning of the provision, we must consider to what the Act of Geo. 2 was applicable."

Note to

In In re Budgett, Cooper v. Adams, [1894] 2 Ch. 557, CHITTY, J., drew a distinction between the rules for construing an amending and consolidating Act and a codifying Act: "I referred yesterday to Lord HERSCHELL's observations in Bank of England v. Vagliano, [1891] A. C. 144, with reference to the Bills of Exchange Act. Those observations do not, in my opinion, apply to the Bankruptcy Act of 1883. The substance of what fell from Lord HERSCHELL is that where there is an Act such as the Bills of Exchange Act codifying the law, the proper rule of interpretation is to read the Act and to interpret its provisions without reference to previous decisions or to previous legislation, that being a primâ facie rule only to which there would be reasonable exceptions. As his lordship said: 'I am of course far from asserting that resort may never be had to the previous state of the law for the purpose of aiding in the construction of the provisions of the code.' Then he gives some examples, which I need not cite at length. But I have here to deal, not with an Act of Parliament codifying the law but with an Act to amend and to consolidate the law, and therefore it is, I say, those observations do not apply, and I think it is legitimate in the interpretation of the sections in this amending and consolidating Act to refer to the previous state of the law for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the legislature." See, however, the same judge's remarks in Thames Conservators v. Smeed Dean & Co., [1897] 2 Q. B. 334; Pasmore v. Oswaldtwistle U. D. C., [1898] A. C. 387, per Lord MACNAGHTEN; The Fulham, [1899] P. 251, per SMITH, L.J.; Couper v. Mackenzie (1906), 8 F. 1202; Williams v. Permanent Trustee Co. of N. S. W., [1906] A. C. 249; and Wernham v. R., [1914] 1 K. B. 468, per BAILHACHE, J. In R. v. Abrahams, [1904] 2 K. B. 859, Lord ALVERSTONE, C.J., said: "The contention is, and to that extent I think it is well founded, that in a consolidation Act, where there are ambiguous expressions, regard may be had to the previous Act of Parliament in pari materiâ for the purpose of interpreting those ambiguous expressions."

Act.

2. This Act shall not extend to Scotland or Ireland, nor (save as by this Act is expressly provided) to the metropolis.

Under the London Government Act, 1899, s. 19, Woolwich is now part of the metropolis for all purposes, and the provisions of this Act which were made applicable to it by the P. H (London) A., 1891, s. 102, no longer apply to it.

parts.

3. This Act is divided into parts, as follows:

- Part I.—Preliminary.
- Part II.—Authorities for Execution of Act.
- Part III.—Sanitary Provisions.
- Part IV.—Local Government Provisions.
- Part V.—General Provisions.
- Part VI.—Rating and Borrowing Powers, etc.
- Part VII.—Legal Proceedings.
- Part VIII.—Alteration of Areas and Union of Districts.
- Part IX.—Local Government Board.
- Part X.—Miscellaneous and Temporary Provisions.
- Part XI.—Saving Clauses and Repeal of Acts.

Besides these parts, the Act contains five schedules containing Rules for the proceedings of local boards, for the proceedings of committees (now repealed), for the election of members of such boards (now repealed), for the convening of meetings of owners and ratepayers, and for the proceedings thereat, forms for numerous objects and the Repeal of previous Acts.

Note to
Section 3.

4. In this Act, if not inconsistent with the context, the following words and expressions have the meanings hereinafter respectively assigned to them ; that is to say,

In R. v. Cambridgeshire JJ. (1838), 7 A. & E. 491, Lord DENMAN, C.J., said : " We apprehend that an interpretation clause is not to be taken as substituting one set of words for another, nor as strictly defining what the meaning of a word must be under all circumstances ; we rather think that it declares what persons may be comprehended within that term when the circumstances require that they should." In Att.-Gen. v. Worcester Corporation (1846), 15 L. J. Ch., at p. 399, Lord COTTENHAM, L.C., said : " The object of these Acts being framed with interpretation clauses is, by the means and through the agency of the interpretation clause, to avoid the necessity of frequent repetition in describing all the subject-matter to which the Act was intended to apply. It uses, therefore, an expression, and then, by the interpretation clause, declares that that expression shall have certain meanings other than the ordinary meaning of the word used, and the way to apply that interpretation clause is, when you find the word used in other enactments, to follow the direction of the interpretation clause, and, according to the subject-matter, to read it as if it contained the other words which by the interpretation clause it is meant to include." In Lindsay v. Cundy (1876), 1 Q. B. D. 348, BLACKBURN, J., said : " The interpretation clause is a modern innovation, and frequently does a great deal of harm, because it gives a non-natural sense to words which are afterwards used in a natural sense without noticing the distinction." In another case he said : " It is a common practice in modern Acts to introduce interpretations into Acts. I am old enough to remember when that was a novelty, and the older draughtsmen said, likely to be a very mischievous novelty. I think that experience has shown that the older draughtsmen had some reason, but the practice is now inveterate " (Portsmouth Corporation v. Smith (1885), 10 App. Cas. 364). Such a clause ought, therefore, to be strictly construed (Allop v. Day (1861), 7 H. & N., at p. 463, per POLLOCK, C.B.). In Midland Rail. Co. v. Ambergate, etc. Rail. Co. (1853), 10 Hare, at p. 369, WOOD, V.-C., said : " With regard to all these interpretation clauses, I understand them to define the meaning, supposing there is nothing else in the Act which is opposed to the particular interpretation." And in R. v. Pearse (1880), 5 Q. B. D., at p. 389, LUSH, J., said : " An interpretation clause should be used for the purpose of interpreting words which are ambiguous or equivocal, and not so as to disturb the meaning of such as are plain." See also the observations of Lord CAMPBELL, C.J., in R. v. Sudbury Burial Board (1858), El. B. & E. 264 ; of WILLES, J., in Ablert v. Pritchard (1866), L. R. 1 C. P. 214 ; of Lord ST. LEONARDS, in Dean of Ely v. Bliss (1852), 2 De G. M. & G., at p. 471 ; and of Lord SELBORNE, in Robinson v. Barton Eccles L. B., on p. 15, post.

It is right to notice the remark, per GIFFARD, L.J., in Ex parte Morris (1869), L. R. 5 Ch. 174 : " General words will not be so construed as to destroy special exemptions or special privileges " ; see also Thorpe v. Adams (1871), L. R. 6 C. P. 125, and Earl of Derby v. Bury Commissioners (1869), L. R. 4 Ex. 222, where this proposition is well illustrated. In Ebbs v. Boulnois (1875), L. R. 10 Ch. 484, JAMES, L.J., observes : " It is a cardinal principle in the interpretation of a statute that if there are two inconsistent enactments, it must be seen if one cannot be read as a qualification of the other. See also on this point, Taylor v. Oldham Corporation, p. 16, post.

See further as to interpretation clauses, notes under the definitions of " union " and " street " in this section, post, pp. 6, 15.

As to the application of these definitions to incorporated enactments, see Sale v. Phillips, p. 8, post, and cases as to " street " on p. 18, post.

Section 4.

"Borough."

"Borough" means any place for the time being subject to the Act of the session of the fifth and sixth years of the reign of King William the Fourth, chapter seventy-six, intituled "An Act to provide for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales," and any Act amending the same :

These Acts have all been repealed and for the most part re-enacted by a consolidating and amending statute, the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, which applies (s. 6) to every city and town to which the Municipal Corporations Act, 1835, applied at the commencement of the Act (i.e., January 1st, 1883), and to any town, district, or place, whereof the inhabitants are incorporated after the commencement of the Act, and whereto the provisions of the Municipal Corporations Acts are under the Act extended by charter, but to no other place. For a similar definition, see the Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 15.

"The Metropolis."

"The metropolis" means the city of London and all parishes and places mentioned in Schedules A., B., and C., to the Metropolis Management Act, 1855 [18 & 19 Vict. c. 120] :

For a list of the parishes and places mentioned in such Schedules, see Woolrych's Metropolis Management Acts, 3rd ed., p. 149. By the express mention of the city of London, the definition of the metropolis contained in the previous Act is rendered more exact. Note that it does not extend to the Metropolitan Police District, as to the limits of which see 10 Geo. 4, c. 44 ; 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, and amending Acts collected in 9 Chitty's Statutes, "Police (Metropolis)," p. 108.

Woolwich is now part of the metropolis. See the note to s. 2, ante, p. 2.

"Local government district";
"local board."

"Local government district" means any area subject to the jurisdiction of a local board constituted in pursuance of the Local Government Acts before the passing of this Act, or in pursuance of this Act, and "local board" means any board so constituted :

The "Local Government Acts" were (see Schedule V., Part I., post, p. 695) the Public Health Act, 1848 ; the Local Government Act, 1858 ; the Local Government Act (1858) Amendment Act, 1861 ; and the Local Government Amendment Act, 1863.

As to the constitution of local government districts in pursuance of this Act, see ss. 271, 272, post, pp. 605, 606.

The restricted meaning of the phrase "local board" should be noticed, as it is frequently used in a popular sense as synonymous with "local authority."

This definition is retained, as the expression is used in this Act ; but by the L. G. A., 1894, s. 21 (1), post, p. 996, the districts of urban sanitary authorities are now called urban districts, and local boards urban district councils.

"Improvement Act district."

"Improvement Act district" means any area for the time being subject to the jurisdiction of any Improvement Commissioners as hereinafter defined :

"Improvement Commissioners."

"Improvement Commissioners" means any commissioners, trustees, or other persons invested by any local Act with powers of town government and rating :

This definition was taken from the P. H. A., 1872, s. 60, but the term "town government" occurred in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 61. It is not clear what the term implies here, as it is most appropriately applied to a municipal corporation. But the P. H. A., 1848, s. 10, suggests a reasonable explanation of the term as signifying "paving, lighting, cleansing, watching, regulating, supplying with water, or improving" any place where there is also a power of rating. Improvement Commissioners are now called urban district councils and their districts urban districts. See the L. G. A., 1894, s. 21 (1), post, p. 996. Note to Section 4.

"Parish" means a place for which a separate poor rate is or can be made, or for which a separate overseer is or can be appointed :

This definition was adopted from the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1866, s. 18. Overseers are and may be appointed for places or districts distinct from parishes. By the Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 5, in every Act passed after the year 1866 the expression "parish" means, unless the contrary intention appears, as respects England and Wales, a place for which a separate poor rate is or can be made, or for which an overseer is or can be appointed. Such definition supersedes that in the text, but is practically identical.

Extra-parochial places have now practically disappeared, for by the Extra-Places Parochial Places Act, 1857, s. 1, every place entered separately in the report of the Registrar-General on the last census which then was or was reputed to be extra-parochial, and wherein no rate was levied for the relief of the poor, was in future for all purposes of the assessment to the poor rate to be deemed a parish ; and the justices having jurisdiction in such place were to appoint overseers therein. And by the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1868, s. 27, every place which was or was reputed to be extra-parochial, whether entered in the Registrar-General's report or not, for which no overseer had been appointed, or was then acting, or which had not then been annexed to and incorporated with an adjoining parish under s. 4 of the Act of 1857, was for all civil parochial purposes to be annexed to and incorporated with the next adjoining parish with which it had the largest common boundary, and in case there should be two or more parishes with which it had boundaries of equal extent, then with that parish which contained the lowest amount of rateable value. Portions of Windsor Castle, Exeter Castle Yard, Lundy Island and certain other islands and lighthouses are still extra-parochial.

Formerly, when a parish extended up to the sea-shore or a tidal river, but there was nothing to show whether it did or did not extend beyond the line of ordinary or medium high water, land below such high-water line could not be assumed to be within the parish (Duke of Bridgewater's Trustees v. Surveyors of Highways of Bootle-cum-Linacre (1866), L. R. 2 Q. B. 4 ; 30 J. P. 725 ; see also R. v. Musson (1858), 22 J. P. 609 ; 8 El. & Bl. 900 ; McCaum v. Sinclair (1859), 23 J. P. 757 ; 2 El. & El. 53 ; Ipswich Dock Commissioners v. St. Peter's, Ipswich (1866), 30 J. P. 820 ; 7 B. & S. 310). But by the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1868, s. 27, every accretion from the sea, whether natural or artificial, and the part of the sea-shore to the low-water mark, and the bank of every river to the middle of the stream, which on December 25th, 1868, had not been included within the boundaries of or annexed to and incorporated with any parish, was for all civil parochial purposes annexed to and incorporated with the parish to which such accretion, part, or bank adjoined in proportion to the extent of the common boundary. In Blackpool Pier Co. v. Fylde Union (1877), 46 L. J. M. C. 189 ; 41 J. P. 344, a pier was constructed of a wooden deck resting on iron piles driven into the sands, so that the water flowed under it, and no alteration was made in the line of low water. It was held that the part of the pier beyond low-water mark, being beyond the realm, was neither extra-parochial nor an accretion from the sea within s. 27, and as such annexed to the parish. Land between high and low water marks: accretions from the sea.

In a recent Scotch case it was held that the boundary of a burgh fixed by statute as "low-water mark" of the sea, followed that mark as it varied from time to time through natural fluctuation or was altered by artificial operations ; and that accordingly, piers consisting of solid structures of stone, erected so as to extend below the natural low-water mark, were situated wholly within the burgh (Leith Docks Commissioners v. Leith Magistrates, [1911] S. C. 1139 ; followed in Christie v. Leven Magistrates, [1912] S. C. 678). See also Fearon v. Warrentpoint U. D. C., in notes to the P. H. A., 1907, s. 94, post, p. 1152. For the general law as to accretion, see Att.-Gen. v. McCarthy, [1911] 2 I. R. 260.

Section 4. "Union" means a union of parishes incorporated or united for the relief or maintenance of the poor under any public or local Act of Parliament (a), and includes (b) any parish (c) subject to the jurisdiction of a separate board of guardians:

"Guardians." "Guardians" means any persons or body of persons by whom the relief of the poor is administered in any union (d):

(a) Before the L. G. A., 1894, the union, exclusive of any urban district within it, was coterminous with the rural sanitary district. Unions were mostly formed under 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76; a few were constituted under special local Acts, but these were urban districts. Since the Act of 1894 the rural district is no longer necessarily coterminous with the rural part of the union, which may include more than one rural district. See ibid., s. 24 (5), post, p. 1002.

"Means";
"includes." (b) In R. v. Kershaw (1856), 20 J. P. 741; 6 El. & Bl. 1007, ERLE, J., points out the distinction between the words include and mean in the same interpretation section, the former having an extending and the latter an excluding effect. But the word "include" may be equivalent to "mean and include" and so have an excluding effect (Dilworth v. Commissioner of Stamps, [1899] A. C. 99). See further as to its meaning, Worsley v. South Devon Rail. Co. (1851), 16 Q. B. 539; Ex parte Ferguson (1871), L. R. 6 Q. B. 280, 291, per BLACKBURN, J.; 35 J. P. 468; Jones v. Cook (1871), L. R. 6 Q. B. 505; 35 J. P. 403; Pound v. Plumstead Board of Works (1871), L. R. 7 Q. B., per BLACKBURN, J., at p. 194; 36 J. P. 468; Baker v. Portsmouth Corporation (1877), 3 Ex. D. 4, 157; Robinson v. Barton Eccles L. B. on p. 15, post; Nutter v. Accrington L. B. (1878), 4 Q. B. D. 375; 43 J. P. 635. A provision that some term shall "extend to" or "apply to" certain specified things or persons does not necessarily exclude some other thing or person within its natural meaning (Doe v. Benham (1845), 7 Q. B. 976; Regent's Canal and Dock Co. v. London C. C. (1909), 73 J. P. 276; 7 L. G. R. 680).

(c) For parishes and places out of the metropolis under a separate board of guardians, see the Poor Law General Orders, 2nd ed., by Macmorran and Naldrett, p. 306. Some of these are urban sanitary districts of themselves, or contain such within their area.

(d) This word includes a parish under a separate board of guardians (see supra).

"Person." "Person" includes any body of persons, whether corporate or unincorporate:

In the P. H. A., 1848, s. 2, this word was applied to corporations aggregate or sole. It is presumed that the latter are included here.

In Pharmaceutical Society v. London and Provincial Supply Association, Ltd. (1880), 5 App. Cas. 857; 45 J. P. 20, Lord SELBORNE, at p. 861, said: "There can be no question that the word 'person' may, and I should be disposed myself to say primâ facie does, in a public statute, include a person in law: that is, a corporation, as well as a natural person. But although that is a sense which the word will bear in law, and which, as I said, perhaps ought to be attributed to it in the construction of a statute unless there should be any reason for a contrary construction, it is never to be forgotten that in its popular sense and ordinary use it does not extend so far. Statutes, like other documents, are constantly conceived according to the popular use of language; and it is certain that this word is often used in statutes in a sense in which it cannot be intended to extend to a corporation. That accounts for the frequent occurrence in some statutes, in interpretation clauses, of an express declaration that it shall extend to a body politic or corporate."

By the Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 2 (1) (re-enacting 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28, s. 14): "In the construction of every enactment relating to an offence punishable on indictment or on summary conviction, whether contained in an Act passed before or after the commencement of this Act, the expression 'person' shall, unless the contrary intention appears, include a body corporate." And by ibid., s. 19: "In this Act and in every Act passed after the commencement of this Act the expression 'person' shall, unless the contrary intention appears, include any body of persons corporate or unincorporate."

Note to
Section 4.

In the following cases the word has been held to include a corporation: Pearks, Gunston and Tee, Ltd. v. Ward, [1902] 2 K. B. 1; 66 J. P. 774; In re Thompson's Trusts, [1905] 1 Ch. 229; R. v. Antrim JJ., [1906] 2 I. R. 298; Hirst v. West Riding Union Banking Co., [1901] 2 K. B. 560; Chuter v. Freeth and Pocock, Ltd., [1911] 2 K. B. 832; 75 J. P. 430; R. v. Ascanio Puck & Co., Ltd. (1912), 76 J. P. 487; 29 T. L. R. 11; and cf. R. v. Gainsford (1913), 29 T. L. R. 359 ("occupier"); Evans v. London C. C. (1914), 30 T. L. R. 509 ("occupier"); in the following it was held not to do so: Pharmaceutical Society's Case, supra; Wills v. Tozer (1904), 53 W. R. 74; Walker v. Richardson (1837), 2 M. & W. 882; O'Duffy v. Jaffe, [1904] 2 I. R. 27; Mylam v. Market Harborough Advertiser Co., Ltd., [1905] 1 K. B. 708; Hawke v. E. Hulton & Co., Ltd., [1909] 2 K. B. 93; 73 J. P. 295.

As to when the word does or does not include an infant, a woman, or a married woman, see cases collected in In re Royal Naval School, [1910] 1 Ch. 806, and Bebb v. Law Society, [1914] 1 Ch. 286.

As to the meaning of "person" in a lease, see Willmott v. London Road Car Co., [1910] 2 Ch. 525.

"Local authority" means urban sanitary authority and rural sanitary authority. "Local authority."

See s. 5, post, p. 37.

"Surveyor" includes (a) any person appointed by a rural authority "Surveyor." to perform any of the duties of surveyor under this Act (b):

(a) See as to the meaning of this word, note (b) on p. 6, ante.

(b) This word is thus defined with reference to a rural sanitary authority because such an authority may not in many cases appoint a special officer as their surveyor under this Act. See s. 190, post, p. 452, as to the powers of a rural authority to appoint officers or servants.

"Lands" and "Premises" include messuages buildings lands ease- "Lands";
ments and hereditaments of any tenure: "premises."

The definition of premises avoids difficulties in the interpretation of the word, such as arose with reference to s. 3 of the Factory Act, 1867, in Kent v. Astley (1869), L. R. 5 Q. B. 19, and Redgrave v. Lee (1874), L. R. 9 Q. B. 363. As the context may in any particular case require a departure from the definition, reference may be made to cases in which the meaning of the word in a local Act was discussed (Metropolitan Water Board v. Paine, [1907] 1 K. B. 285; 71 J. P. 63; Metropolitan Water Board v. Johnson, [1913] 3 K. B. 900; 77 J. P. 384).

By the Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 3, in every Act passed after the year 1850, Land. unless the contrary intention appears, the expression "land" includes messuages, tenements, and hereditaments, houses and buildings of any tenure. That definition omits "easements." It was intimated in Oldacre v. Hunt (1855), 6 De G. M. & G., at p. 390, that the word "land," as defined by the P. H. A., 1848, s. 2, included a right of fishery. The Lords Justices gave no express decision on this point; but it is to be observed that the definition in that section did not include the word easement, which was introduced into the present definition as a new term. A Easements. right of water to a mill is an easement (Cleckheaton U. D. C. v. Firth (1898), 62 J. P. 536).

The term hereditaments includes every kind of property that can be inherited. Heredita- Hereditaments are corporeal or incorporeal. The former are tangible, and are ments. practically the same as land; the latter are not tangible, but are the rights and profits annexed to or issuing out of land, e.g., tithes, rents, rights of common, etc.

Note to
Section 4.

A church was held not to be "land" within the Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862, s. 77 (Angell v. Paddington Vestry (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 714; 32 J. P. 742; and see Wright v. Ingle (1885), 16 Q. B. D. 379). A railway was carried across a new street by an arch. On one side of the street it was carried forward on arches, and on that side was a strip of land ten feet wide left open for the purpose of repairing the arches; this abutted for ten feet on the street. On the other side the railway was carried forward on an embankment, and the sloping part of the embankment abutted on the street about thirty-six feet; at the foot of the embankment was an open space about thirty-six feet wide, also abutting on the street, and left for the purpose of allowing of slips in the embankment. It was held that the railway company were liable to contribute to the expenses of paving the street as owners of land within s. 77, supra (Higgins v. Harding (1872), L. R. 8 Q. B. 7; 37 J. P. 677; and see G. E. Rail. Co. v. Hackney District Board, on p. 12, post). See also the next note.

"Owner."

"Owner" means the person for the time being receiving the rack-rent of the lands or premises in connection with which the word is used, whether on his own account or as agent or trustee for any other person, or who would so receive the same if such lands or premises were let at a rack-rent:

"Means."

The word means appears to be restrictive, and to imply that what follows is to be the only interpretation of the word owner, so that an owner in fee who has let land on a nominal ground rent is not within the definition. See note (b) on p. 6, ante, and cases, infra.

This definition applies in construing the provisions of the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847, as to fires, incorporated by s. 171. See Sale v. Phillips, [1894] 1 Q. B. 349; 58 J. P. 460.

By the Nuisances Removal Act, 1855, s. 2, the word owner included any person receiving the rent of the property in respect of which the word was used from the occupier of such property, on his own account, or as trustee or agent for any other person. A. was lessee for twenty-one years, at a rack-rent, of a house and shop; he occupied the shop himself, and sublet the upper part of the house to B. as a yearly tenant. The upper part was shut off from the shop, and A. had no access to it. A privy in the upper part of the house caused a nuisance arising from defective construction of a structural convenience; and the authority proceeded against C., who received the rent from A. as agent for A.'s landlord:—Held, that C. was not owner, as he did not receive the rent from B., who was the occupier of the premises on which the nuisance arose, and of which A. was the owner (Cook v. Montague (1872), L. R. 7 Q. B. 418; 37 J. P. 53). It is to be observed that the words "from the occupier of such property," which occur in the Nuisances Removal Act, are not in the text. It appears from the cases cited below that where there are intermediate lessors, and the rent received by each is the same, the person ultimately receiving the rent is the owner; but that a lessor receiving from his lessee more rent than he pays, is the owner within this definition. In Rice v. White, [1904] 2 I. R. 8, parts of a tenement were sublet to weekly tenants by F., who herself occupied the residue of the tenement. The annual value of the premises under the Valuation Acts was £38. F. was lessee for a term of 31 years at a yearly rent of £34. The rents received from the sub-tenants amounted in all to £107 a year, and the letting value of the rooms retained by F. was £19 per year. It was held (applying Bowen v. James (1882), 10 L. R. Ir. 26) that F. was the owner of the premises for the purposes of the P. H. (Ireland) A., 1878, in which the definition of "owner" is the same as in this Act. In Walford v. Hackney Board of Works (1894), 43 W. R. 110, H. let premises to W. for a term of years at the rent of £25, subsequently increased to £31; W. sublet the premises, agreeing to accept the same rent as he himself paid, and paid it over to H. without any deductions; it was held that W. was not the "owner" of the premises. In Truman, Hanbury, Buxton & Co. v. Kerlake, [1894] 2 Q. B. 774; 58 J. P. 766, it was held that where the lessee of premises not let at a rack-rent has sublet them for his whole term, less a few days, the rent reserved and the covenants and conditions being the same as in the original lease, the sub-lessee, and not the lessee, is the "owner" within this definition. In Field & Sons v. Southwark Borough Council (1907), 71 J. P. 240; 96 L. T. 646, the leaseholders of a house and premises, let them to B., who covenanted not to sublet. He then, without their consent, sublet each floor to a separate tenant. The water supply of the house would have been sufficient if it had been in the occupation of one tenant, but the only water supply available for the tenant of the top floor was that provided by a tap in the yard. It was held that no order could be made against the leaseholders as "owners" under s. 48 of the P. H. (London) A., 1891, to abate the nuisance of there being an insufficient supply for the top floor, since the house could not be treated as an occupied house for the purposes of s. 48, in which the words "occupied house" mean a "structure as let," and since, even if it could be so treated, the leaseholders not being in receipt of the rack-rent, were not "owners" within the Act. See also cases decided under the London Building Acts on p. 10, post.

It being admitted that a plaintiff held certain premises as tenant of F. under a lease dated in 1883, the plaintiff put in evidence such lease by which F.'s predecessor leased the premises to the plaintiff's predecessor, for the residue (less seven days) of a term of eighty years from 1840, at a rent of £60 per annum. It was held that the plaintiff had given some, but not satisfactory evidence, that F. was receiving a "rack-rent," and was therefore "owner" within this definition (Wareham and Dale, Limited v. Fyffe (1910), 74 J. P. 249; 8 L. G. R. 620).

The Metropolis Management Act, 1855, s. 250, defines "owner" in the same words as the text. The builder of houses abutting on a new street occupied the land under a building agreement, by which the owner of the land agreed to demise to the builder, or his nominees, the several pieces of land upon which he was to build, as the houses and buildings respectively became erected and covered, for eighty years, at the rent of a peppercorn for two years, and of sums increasing every year up to £364 in the sixth and following years. He was to be considered as holding the undemised portion on the terms of the leases. There was a power of re-entry upon non-completion of the building covenants. The houses, at the date when the expenses which were the subject of the action were incurred, were in every stage of progress, and some had been demised to other persons at the builder's nomination:—Held, that with the exception of the houses so demised to other persons, he was liable as owner of all the premises. Per BLACKBURN, J.: "He was in actual occupation; his peppercorn rent was to be raised to a ground rent. There could not be a reason for saying that the freeholder was receiving the rack-rent. It may be a substantial rent, but not such as to prevent the defendant from being the owner" (Poplar Board of Works v. Love (1874), 29 L. T. 915). In Lady Holland v. Kensington Vestry (1867), L. R. 2 C. P. 565; 31 J. P. 758, A., being owner in fee of land, entered into a building agreement, whereby B. agreed to build certain houses on part of the land, and to lay out the remainder as a garden for the exclusive use of tenants of the houses, and A. agreed to grant to B. a lease of each house as it was built, and of the garden with the last house; and it was expressly agreed that B. should have no interest in any house or land until a lease of it was granted. B. built some of the houses, but not all, and laid out the garden, and A. subsequently sold the reversion of the houses which were built to C. The vestry, having paved a road running past the garden, claimed repayment of the expense from A. It was held that A. was the owner of the garden, and therefore liable. Per WILLES, J.: "If the houses had been all built, and B. had obtained a lease of the garden, he would have been trustee for the inhabitants of the houses under the section. But at present A. is the legal owner, subject only to certain easements possessed by the inhabitants of the houses that have been built, and to the consideration that if and when certain acts are done she will be bound to grant the legal estate to B. It may be that she only holds as trustee for the inhabitants of the houses, but it is not only the beneficial owner, but the owner who holds as trustee for others, that is liable to make the payments under the Acts." This decision was followed in Driscoll v. Battersea Borough Council, [1903] 1 K. B. 881; 67 J. P. 264. In that case the building agreement, which described the freeholder as the intended lessor, and the builder as the intended lessee, was to the effect that the builder might enter upon and retain possession of the land in question, and should erect thirty-two houses thereon. Until leases had been granted of all the plots the builder was to pay to the freeholder a rent of £200 per annum (which was not in fact a rack-rent), or so much thereof as should not have been reserved by leases actually granted. On the completion of each house, and on payment of all moneys due, the freeholder was to grant a lease for ninety-nine years. The freeholder had power to distrain for any part of the £200. It was expressly provided that the contract was to operate as an agreement only, and not as an actual demise of the premises, or to give the builder any legal interest therein until the contemplated leases of the completed houses were executed. The £200 was duly paid, but no houses had been erected or buildings commenced. See also cases decided under the London Building Acts, infra.

Note to

"Ownership"
under London Building
Acts.

The Metropolitan Building Act, 1855, s. 3 (now replaced by the London Building Act, 1894, s. 5 (29)), provided that the word owner should apply to every person in possession or receipt either of the whole or of any part of the rents or profits of any land or tenement, or in the occupation of such land or tenement, other than as a tenant from year to year or for any less term, or as a tenant at will. It was held that an owner of land in fee simple, who let it on a building lease at a peppercorn rent, was not liable as owner, such a rent not being within the meaning of the section (Evelyn v. Wychcord (1858), 22 J. P. 658; El. B. & E. 126). And see List v. Tharp, [1897] 1 Ch. 260; 61 J. P. 248. In Caudwell v. Hanson (1871), L. R. 7 Q. B. 55; 36 J. P. 470, a freeholder agreed with L. to grant him long leases of certain plots of land, so soon as L. should have erected houses thereon, at a peppercorn rent until June 24th, 1870, and afterwards at £28 a year. L. built houses which were roofed in about September, 1870, but leases had not been granted. It was held that L. was the "owner" thereof, and that it was immaterial whether his title was legal or equitable only. And see to the same effect St. Helen's Corporation v. Riley (1883), 47 J. P. 471. In Cowen v. Phillips (1863), 33 Beav. 18, it was held that a tenant in possession, having an equitable interest only under an agreement for a lease for a term of three years, was in equity an owner under this section. In Hunt v. Harris (1865), 19 C. B. (N.S.) 13, the lessee of a house for a long term who had sublet it in different portions to different tenants, and who was in receipt of the rents from such sublettings, was held to be the owner of the party-wall of such house within the meaning of the above section, notwithstanding that the sublettings created a greater interest in the subtenants than that of a yearly tenancy. The last-mentioned case and Cowen v. Phillips, supra, were discussed in Fillingham v. Wood, [1891] 1 Ch. 51. There it was held that a tenant in possession of part of a house under an agreement for a greater interest than as tenant from year to year was an adjoining owner entitled to be served with a party-wall notice under the Act, and that service on a person in receipt of the whole of the rents of the tenement was not sufficient. In Mourilyan v. Labalmondiere (1861), 25 J. P. 340; 1 El. & El. 533, the appellants were seised in fee of a building used as a chapel which they had let on lease for twenty-one years. It was held that they were not, but that the lessee was, the owner within the meaning of the section. In R. v. Lee (1878), 4 Q. B. D. 75; 43 J. P. 302, it was held that the incumbent of a district church was not the owner within the above section, although the freehold of the church was vested in him, as he neither received the rents or profits of the church nor was in occupation of it. But in Folkestone Corporation v. Woodward (1872), L. R. 15 Eq. 159, where it was held that a church was a house for the purposes of a local Act prescribing a building line, a perpetual curate, in whom the freehold was vested, was held to be the owner. In Regents Canal and Dock Co. v. London C. C. (1909), 73 J. P. 276; 7 L. G. R. 680, it was held that a canal company were owners within the meaning of the section of a bridge across their canal which they had built as part of the canal undertaking.

As to the "ownership" of churches and chapels under the London Building Acts, see cases, supra. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners, in whom a church not built by them was vested, were held not to be the owners for the purposes of the Metropolis Management Acts (Angell v. Paddington Vestry (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 714; 32 J. P. 742). By the Church Building Acts Amendment Act, 1845, s. 13, the "freehold of the site of every church" of which the commissioners therein mentioned shall accept a conveyance under the Church Building Acts (as to any church not yet consecrated, when the same shall be consecrated), shall vest in the incumbent. Land having been conveyed under the Church Building Acts to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners as a site for a church, a church was afterwards erected on a part of the land, and the church and a part only of the land were consecrated:—Held, that upon such consecration, the whole of the land so conveyed to the commissioners vested in the incumbent; that the commissioners ceased to be the owners of it, and were therefore not liable under the Metropolis Management Acts, 1855 and 1862, to contribute in respect of it towards the cost of paving a new street (Plumstead District Board of Works v. Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England, [1891] 2 Q. B. 361; 55 J. P. 791). The position of an incumbent in respect of poor rates on land acquired as a burial ground under the Church Building Acts was recently discussed in North Manchester Overseers v. Winstanley, [1910] A. C. 7; 74 J. P. 49. The trustees of a dissenting chapel, registered as a place of religious worship, were held liable for paving expenses under the Metropolis Management Acts, as the owners of a house in Caiger v. St. Mary, Islington, Vestry (1881), 50 L. J. M. C. 59; 45 J. P. 570. And a leasehold chapel vested in trustees on trust, to permit it to be used as a place of religious worship by a congregation of Wesleyans, was held to be a house within the meaning of the same Acts, and the trustees were held to be owners thereof, on the ground that by consent of the landlord, the trustees, and the cestuis que trustent, the trusts might at any moment be put an end to (Wright v. Ingle (1885), 16 Q. B. D. 379; 50 J. P. 436). The defendants were trustees of a chapel consisting of two floors. The upper floor was the chapel itself, and the lower contained a lecture hall and several smaller rooms. The upper floor was exclusively appropriated to public religious worship, and the premises as a whole were registered as a place of religious worship. The lecture hall was used for the purpose of a Sunday school and of an institute, the members of the latter paying a subscription, and lectures and concerts were from time to time given in the hall in connection with the institute, for which tickets were sold to persons who were not members; but the money received did not cover the cost of the entertainments. A bazaar and a sale of work had also been held in the lecture hall, when a charge was made for admission. The money realised from the bazaar was handed to one of the defendants, and appropriated by him to the chapel building fund, and the proceeds of the sale of work were devoted to the purchase of a piano for the institute. The defendants, who had no beneficial interest in the chapel, having failed to comply with a notice under s. 150 of this Act requiring them to pave, etc. the portion of the street upon which the chapel abutted, the complainants executed the work, and obtained an order of justices for repayment by the defendants of the expenses incurred:—Held, that the defendants were the "owners" of the premises, that they did not come within s. 151, which exempts from liability "the incumbent or minister of any church, chapel, or place appropriated to public religious worship," and that the order of the justices was therefore rightly made (Hornsey L. B. v. Brewis (1890), 60 L. J. M. C. 48; 55 J. P. 389).

The owner of private roads was held to be "owner" of land within the Metropolis Management Acts (Pound and Lord Northbrook v. Plumstead Board of Works (1871), L. R. 7 Q. B. 183; 36 J. P. 468). But a land society which had set out and dedicated roads to the public, and sold off the building plots fronting them, was held by the Exchequer Chamber not to be owners of land within the Act (Plumstead Board of Works v. British Land Co. (1875), L. R. 10 Q. B. 203; 39 J. P. 376). Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., distinguished Pound v. Plumstead Board of Works, supra, on the ground that Lord Northbrook had there "for his own purposes determinately reserved his property in the private roads to himself. He might at any time have put an end to the dedication of them to his own tenants, which was all he had ever done. There was no dedication of it to the public, and there was nothing done Premises not lettable at a rack-rent." Also, referring to Angell v. Paddington Vestry, supra, he indicated an opinion that when expenses are sought to be recovered under such Acts as the

P. H. Acts from persons as owners of land, it is not enough that they should be owners of land or houses, "for real property purposes," but they must be "the owners of land which could be let at a rack-rent within the meaning of the statute." It may be observed in this connection, that the owner of the soil of a street dedicated to public use as a highway may be properly described as owner of land for real property purposes, although by reason of the highway being incapable of being let at a rack-rent, he cannot, as such owner, be charged with such expenses as paving expenses. So, too, damage to a road by traffic has been held to be damage to "property" (Croydon R. D. C. v. Sutton District Water Co. (1908), 72 J. P. 217). The decision in Plumstead Board of Works v. British Land Co., supra, was followed by POLLOCK, B., in Hampstead Vestry v. Cotton (1885), 16 Q. B. D. 475; 50 J. P. 453. In Wright v. Ingle, supra, BOWEN, L.J., said: "The section does not confine the term 'owner' to those persons who could receive a rack-rent from the particular premises, or who could let them at a rack-rent; it includes those persons who would receive the rack-rent if the premises were let at a rack-rent, and I think Bowditch v. Wakefield L. B., infra, is a conclusive authority, if authority were wanted, to show that a man is not the less the owner of premises because, by the provisions of the deed under which he holds them, they cannot, so long as he holds them, be let at a rack-rent. Whether in the case of premises which were prevented by an Act of Parliament from being let at a rack-rent, there ever could be an owner within the meaning of the section I very much doubt. I am inclined to think that if the incapacity to be let were stamped upon the premises, they never could have an owner within the meaning of the section."

In G. E. Rail. Co. v. Hackney District Board of Works (1883), 8 App. Cas. 687; 48 J. P. 52, a street was carried over a railway cutting by a bridge, the parapets of which consisted of two walls resting upon arches, which had their foundations outside the lines of the roadway in the company's land. The walls were not used otherwise than as fences for the bridge. It was held that the company were not liable for paving expenses as owners of land abutting on the street. "The bridge is, by the statute, dedicated to public use, and its fence walls are provided for public protection; and if the ownership and control of the walls is in the company, it is so for public purposes; and subject to the obligation of perpetual maintenance, unless and until some other good and sufficient fences shall be provided by the company in their stead for the public protection. The company could not let the walls at a rack-rent; and if they might use them for any purpose, it must be a use subordinate to the public purposes to which the bridge, as a structure, is in its whole devoted." This case was distinguished in Williams v. Wandsworth District Board of Works (1884), 13 Q. B. D. 211; 48 J. P. 439. There the appellant was held to be chargeable as owner of a strip of land, four inches wide and 265 feet in length, upon which he had erected a boundary fence in pursuance of a covenant made with the adjoining owner (his vendor) to erect and for ever maintain a fence thereon. Cf. Elsdon v. Hampstead Corporation, [1905] 2 Ch. 633; 69 J. P. 434; and Hampstead Borough Council v. Western (1907), 71 J. P. 565. By a special Act it was provided that for the protection of the owners of certain land taken for sidings, a railway company should leave a strip of land twenty feet wide along the whole length of a certain road, and at their own expense plant and maintain trees thereon to the satisfaction of the owners, and fence it off from the road. The company left the strip of land accordingly, and planted and fenced it off. The court held that as the burden on the strip of land was imposed for the benefit of individuals who might release it, the land was not incapable for ever of being let at a rack-rent, and that therefore the company were the "owners" thereof, and were liable to contribute towards the expenses of paving the road (Hampstead Corporation v. Midland Rail. Co., [1905] 1 K. B. 538; 69 J. P. 133).

Commons.

In Re Christchurch Inclosure Act, Meyrick v. Att.-Gen., [1894] 3 Ch. 209; 58 J. P. 556, the lord of a manor was held liable for paving expenses as owner of a common, which was originally waste of the manor, and was afterwards by an Inclosure Act allotted to the lord, subject to the turbary rights of certain cottages: it was assumed that the Act prevented him from letting it.

The Thames Conservators were a public body in whom were vested by statute the bed of the river and its shores within the flux and reflux of the tides. The Acts regulating their duties gave them various powers for the improvement of the navigation, but gave them no power of scavenging or removing nuisances; their power of raising funds, and the application of the funds when raised, were strictly limited, and did not include a power to raise money for the sanitary improvement of the river. It was held that under their statutes they were owners of the soil and foreshore for certain specified purposes only, and were not owners thereof so as to be liable to abate a nuisance thereon under the P. H. (London) A., 1891 (Thames Conservators v. Port of London Sanitary Authority, [1894] 1 Q. B. 647; 58 J. P. 335). The Lee Conservancy Board, incorporated for the purpose of improving the navigation of the Lee, owned a strip of land about twenty-six feet wide, which had been acquired by their predecessors for the purpose of strengthening the river bank. By various statutes the board were empowered—inter alia—to construct locks, docks, wharves, etc.; to sell, or otherwise dispose of any lands vested in them which were not required for their statutory purposes, and to charge tolls; but they were not empowered to make a profit. It was provided that the payment of expenses incident to all powers and duties under the Acts should be considered as among the purposes for which income received under those Acts was by law applicable. It would be possible for the board, if they chose to substitute a retaining wall, to dispose of a portion of the land which would then be no longer required. The Court of Appeal held that the nature of the undertaking of the board, and the conditions under which it was carried on, did not place the land in question extra commercium, or make it incapable of being let at a rack-rent, and that therefore the board were “owners” thereof within the meaning of the Metropolitan Management Acts, and liable to contribute to the expenses of making up a new street upon which the land abutted (Hackney Borough Council v. Lee Conservancy Board, [1904] 2 K. B. 541; 68 J. P. 485).

Note to Section 4.

Bed and banks of navigable rivers.

The respondents were a cemetery company incorporated by Act of Parliament whereby it was provided that part of the cemetery should be set apart for the interment of the dead according to the rites of the Church of England, and might be consecrated for that purpose, and when so consecrated should for ever thereafter be set apart and applied exclusively for the uses of Christian burial. Under their Act the company had power to sell the exclusive right of burial in vaults in perpetuity or for a limited period, but were prohibited from selling or disposing of any land which had been consecrated or set apart or used for the burial of the dead. It was held that as the company were owners in fee of the land with the power of letting or selling the land for the purposes of interment, and as, moreover, there was nothing to prevent them from letting it or part of it to another cemetery company at a rack-rent so long as it was used as a cemetery, they were liable as owners to contribute towards the expenses of paving a road which bounded the consecrated part of the cemetery (St. Giles, Camberwell, Vestry v. London Cemetery Co., [1894] 1 Q. B. 699; 58 J. P. 382).

A trustee of a National School was held to be an “owner” thereof (Bowditch v. Schools. Wakefield L. B. (1871), L. R. 6 Q. B. 567; 36 J. P. 107). Under the School Sites Act, 1841, s. 6, a piece of land was conveyed in the form given in s. 10 to trustees for ever for purposes of the Act, as a site for a National School “and for no other purpose whatever”; and the school was erected. In proceedings against the trustees to recover paving expenses under s. 150, apportioned upon them in respect of the school, it was held that as under the School Sites Act the premises might in certain events be sold or exchanged, or might be transferred to a School Board at a rent under the Education Acts, the premises were not so incapacitated from ever being let at a rack-rent as to prevent the trustees from being liable as owners (Hornsey U. D. C. v. Smith, [1897] 1 Ch. 843). A site granted under s. 2 of the Act of 1841 is subject to a reverter clause in favour of the grantor. See Att.-Gen. v. Shadwell, [1910] 1 Ch. 92.

Under a scheme made pursuant to the Metropolitan Commons Act, 1866, and Recreation confirmed by the Metropolitan Commons Supplemental Act, 1873, Tooting Bec grounds. Common was vested in the Metropolitan Board of Works (predecessors of the London C. C.) for the use of the public. The scheme provided that the common should be regulated and managed by the Board, and that no houses or buildings should be erected upon it except such lodges or buildings as might be necessary for its management and maintenance. There was a lodge on the common occupied by an inspector employed by the council, a deduction being made from his wages in respect of his occupation. There was a refreshment house on the common let to a contractor at a rental of £30 a year, and rights of grazing were also let for about £20 a year. The expenditure in respect of the common always exceeded the receipts therefrom. The Court of Appeal held (overruling Fulham Vestry v. Minter, infra), that the County Council were not "owners" within the meaning of the Metropolis Management Acts (London C. C. v. Wandsworth Borough Council, [1903] 1 K. B. 797; 67 J. P. 215). In Fulham Vestry v. Minter, [1901] 1 K. B. 501; 65 J. P. 180, a Divisional Court had held that an open space acquired by a local authority, under the Open Spaces Acts, 1877 and 1881, by deed which provided that the land should be maintained for the perpetual use thereof by the public for exercise and recreation, might nevertheless not be land incapable of becoming a source of profit, and that therefore the authority might be persons who would receive the rent of the land if the same were let at a rack-rent, and so be "owners" within the definition.

Note to

With the Tooting Bec Common case, supra, may be usefully contrasted St. Mary, Islington, Vestry v. Cobbett, [1895] 1 Q. B. 369; 58 J. P. 716. The vestry had in pursuance of the Metropolitan Open Spaces Act, 1881, s. 5, acquired by assignment of a lease the residue of a term of twenty-six years in the centre portion of a square, used as a pleasure ground by the occupiers of houses in the square. The assignment contained covenants by the vestry that the land should be used for the purposes of a public garden or open space, and, on failure so to use it, to re-assign. It was held that the vestry was the "owner" within the meaning of the Metropolis Management Acts.

A Divisional Court has held that a pleasure ground owned by an urban district council was not land extra commercium. The land had been bought under the P. H. A., 1875, for a public pleasure ground, and under the covenants in the conveyance the council were bound to keep it open as a recreation and pleasure ground for the use of the public for ever (Herne Bay U. D. C. v. Payne and Wood, [1907] 2 K. B. 130; 71 J. P. 282).

Upon a similar definition in a local Act, it was held that an agent employed to collect the rents of property charged with an apportionment of paving expenses was an owner, and liable as such to be called upon to pay, whether he had money of his principal in hand or not, at any time while the sum assessed upon the premises remained unpaid (St. Helen's Corporation v. Kirkham (1885), 16 Q. B. D. 403; 50 J. P. 647). See also Metropolitan Water Board v. Brooks, in note to s. 72 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, p. 1425, post. In Broadbent v. Shepherd (1900), 65 J. P. 70, it was held that a mere rent collector may be served as owner, under s. 94, post, p. 173, with a notice to abate a nuisance, although such nuisance arises from structural defects. And he may be ordered under s. 96, post, p. 179, to abate it even though he has resigned his post after notice to abate (Broadbent v. Shepherd (No. 2), [1901] 2 K. B. 274; 65 J. P. 499). In Cook v. Montague, p. 8, ante, BLACKBURN, J., said: "The object of the legislature seems to have been this, that as the occupier was often poor, and the real owner might be difficult to discover, it was as well to get at the collector of rents, who could always be found out; and hence the person who receives the rack-rent from the occupier is deemed the owner." An agent or rent collector is not, however, an "owner" for the purposes of the Representation of the People Act, 1867, s. 7, which contains no definition of the term (Nokes v. Strong, [1909] 2 K. B. 625; 73 J. P. 417). The above definition of "owner" does not include a receiver appointed by the court (Bacup Corporation v. Smith (1890), 44 Ch. D. 395).

Receivers.

A second mortgagee took possession and collected the rents, which he applied in paying his outgoings and interest on the first mortgage; these exhausted all the receipts. It was held that he was liable as "owner" for paving expenses (Tottenham L. B. v. Williamson (1893), 62 L. J. Q. B. 322; 57 J. P. 614). When a mortgagee has taken possession, he is, and the mortgagor is no longer, the "owner" (Maguire v. Leigh-on-Sea U. D. C. (1906), 70 J. P. 479). Trustees in receipt of rents are "owners," though not beneficially interested (In re Barney, Harrison v. Barney, [1894] 3 Ch. 562; and see In re Lever, Cordwell v. Lever, [1897] 1 Ch. 32).

Note to
Section 4.

In Glossop Corporation v. Cooper (1913), 136 L. T. Jo. 90, a county court judge held that executors (of an executor) succeeding to an unsaleable and unlettable plot of land were not liable as "owners" thereof de bonis propriis for paying expenses under s. 150, post, p. 282.

As to the "ownership" of land devised for a long term on trust to pay debts, etc., see Mansell v. Norton (1883), 22 Ch. D. 769.

"Rack-rent" means rent which is not less than two-thirds of the full net annual value of the property out of which the rent arises (a); and the full net annual value shall be taken to be the rent at which the property might reasonably be expected to let from year to year, free from all usual tenant's rates and taxes, and tithe commutation rent-charge (if any), and deducting therefrom the probable average annual cost of the repairs, insurance, and other expenses (if any) necessary to maintain the same in a state to command such rent (b):

(a) See the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834, s. 109.

(b) This definition is taken from the Parochial Assessments Act, 1836, s. 1, and is what is set out in the column of the rate in the schedule headed rateable value. As to the meaning of the words "free from all usual tenant's rates and taxes," etc., see Ryde on Rating, 3rd ed., pp. 202—6, and Hackett v. Long Bennington Overseers (1864), 16 C. B. (N.S.) 38; R. v. Hall Dare (1864), 34 L. J. M. C. 17. In the latter, SHEE, J., explained the words "free from," as being equivalent to "without regard to," or "putting aside." This definition is probably best explained in the words of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869, s. 4, which declares that "'gross value' means the annual rent which a tenant might reasonably be expected, taking one year with another, to pay for an hereditament, if the tenant undertook to pay all usual tenant's rates and taxes, and tithe commutation rent-charge, if any, and if the landlord undertook to bear the cost of the repairs and insurance, and the other expenses, if any, necessary to maintain the hereditament in a state to command that rent." "'Rateable value' means the gross value after deducting therefrom the probable annual average cost of the repairs, insurance, and other expenses as aforesaid." From this it will be seen that the "net annual value" in the definition is the same as the "rateable value" as defined in the Act of 1869.

"Tenant's rates and taxes" means those which are borne by the occupier as distinguished from the owner of land, and include poor, highway, watering, watching, police, borough, general district rates; but not land tax or property tax, which are landlord's rates or taxes. See Ryde on Rating, 3rd ed., pp. 202—6, as to these rates and taxes and the mode of estimating them.

The following recent cases bearing upon this subject might also be referred to: Waddle v. Sunderland Union, [1908] 1 K. B. 642; 72 J. P. 99; Green v. Newport Union; Stead v. Newport Union, [1909] A. C. 35; 73 J. P. 17.

As to evidence that a rent paid is a "rack-rent," see Wareham and Dale, Limited v. Pyffe, p. 9, ante.

"Street" (a) includes any highway [not being a turnpike road] (b), "Street," and any public bridge (not being a county bridge) (c), and any road lane footway square court alley or passage whether a thoroughfare or not (d):

(a) See as to the word "include," p. 6, note (b), ante.

In Robinson v. Barton Eccles L. B. (1883), 8 App. Cas. 798; 48 J. P. 276, Lord SELBORNE said: "An interpretation clause of this kind is not meant to prevent the word receiving its ordinary, popular, and natural sense whenever that would be properly applicable; but to enable the word, as used in the Act, when there is nothing in the context or the subject-matter to the contrary, to be applied to some things to which it would not ordinarily be applicable. I look upon this portion of the interpretation clause as meaning neither more nor less than this: that the provisions contained in the Act as to streets, whether new streets or old streets, shall, unless there be something in the subject-matter and the context to the contrary, be read as applicable to these different things. It is perfectly consistent with that, that they should be read as applicable, and should be applied to those things to which they in their natural sense apply, and which do not require any interpretation clause to bring them in; and in the natural and popular sense of the word street, or the words new street, I should certainly understand a roadway with buildings on each side (it is not necessary to say how far they must or may be continuous or discontinuous); and by new street, a place which before had not that character, but which, by the construction of buildings on each side, or possibly on one side, has acquired it." From this it will appear that the definition in the text does not invariably govern the meaning of the word street throughout the Act, and it is important to distinguish the various meanings which have been assigned to the term in different sections. See also p. 3, ante.

in s. 16: In Taylor v. Oldham Corporation (1876), 4 Ch. D. 395, JESSEL, M.R., held that the word street, as used in s. 16, included private streets and roads; in fact, that the word must be interpreted according to the extended meaning assigned to it by the above definition. This decision was followed with approval in Hill v. Wallasey L. B., [1894] 1 Ch. 133. The same meaning must evidently be given to the word as used in s. 32.

in s. 26: In s. 26 the word street is used to mean the roadway as distinguished from the roadway with the houses, and it is probably used in the sense assigned to it by the above definition. The same remark applies to ss. 42, 57, 72, and 126.

in s. 149: It has been expressly decided that street in s. 149 includes a country lane of which the herbage may be let. It is, therefore, used in its extended sense as here defined (Coverdale v. Charlton (1878), 4 Q. B. D. 104; 43 J. P. 268). And see to the same effect, Nutter v. Accrington L. B. (1878), 4 Q. B. D. 375; 45 J. P. 635, decided on the corresponding section of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63. In Robinson v. Barton Eccles L. B., supra, Lord SELBORNE said: "In s. 149 of this Act, and the sections which follow it, the word street manifestly has the same sense as when we speak of a man going out of his house into the street, or carriages passing along the street. There the public highway, whether footway or carriage-way, is alone intended, and the houses on either side are certainly not included in that case in the street. And I should be inclined myself to say that this would primâ facie be the sense of the word street when it is used in a context which contains no indication of anything more."

in s. 150: Section 150 is the complement of s. 149, and it would seem that the word "street" as therein used has the same meaning. That the word means the roadway as distinguished from the road with the houses is clear, and the dictum of Lord SELBORNE, already quoted, applies to s. 150 as well as to s. 149. The cases have not consistently decided whether the word is used in its natural and ordinary sense of a roadway with houses on both sides, or in the wider meaning assigned to it by the definition. Maude v. Baildon L. B. (1883), 10 Q. B. D. 394; 47 J. P. 644, apparently decided that the word "street" is used in s. 150 in its natural sense as distinguished from its extended meaning. But in Portsmouth Corporation v. Smith (1883), 13 Q. B. D. 184; 48 J. P. 404, the Master of the Rolls questioned that decision, pointing out that it had proceeded upon a mistaken view in R. v. Dayman, infra. And the court decided that the word "street" as used in s. 53 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847 (which corresponds to s. 150 of this Act), had to be interpreted according to the definition, and, therefore, included a highway which was not a street in the ordinary sense. And in the case of Midland Rail. Co. v. Watton (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 30; 50 J. P. 405, the court assumed that in s. 150 the word "street" was used as here defined. But all doubt on the subject is now removed by the decision of the Court of Appeal in Jovett v. Idle L. B. (1888), 57 L. T. 928; 36 W. R. 34; followed in Richards v.

Kessick (1888), 57 L. J. M. C. 48; 52 J. P. 756; Fenwick v. Croydon R. S. A., [1891] 2 Q. B. 216; 55 J. P. 470, and Walthamstow U. D. C. v. Sandell (1904), 68 J. P. 509; 2 L. G. R. 835. These cases decide that the word "street," as used in s. 150, means a street as above defined, and not merely a street in the ordinary sense. Where a local Act provided that every new street should be laid out at least thirty-six feet wide, a new road, eighteen feet wide, which had been sanctioned in the expectation that the adjoining owner would widen it to the full width, was held to be a street within the meaning of a section corresponding to s. 150 (West Hartlepool Corporation v. Robinson (1897), 62 J. P. 35; 77 L. T. 387). A path in Epping Forest was held to be a street which, with the consent of the Epping Forest Conservators, might be made up under the Private Street Works Act, 1892 (Woodford U. D. C. v. Henwood (1899), 64 J. P. 148). As to roadways belonging to railway companies, see cases in the note (b) to s. 150, post, p. 285.

Section 4.

A "street" may be formed by adding, and dedicating to the public, a longitudinal strip of land alongside a highway. See Richards v. Kessick, supra; White v. Fulham Vestry (1896), 60 J. P. 327; 74 L. T. 425; Property Exchange, Limited v. Wandsworth Board of Works, [1902] 2 K. B. 61; 66 J. P. 435; Portsmouth Corporation v. Hall (1907), 71 J. P. 299; 97 L. T. 43; reversed on appeal on another point, 71 J. P. 564; 98 L. T. 513).

The word street in s. 156 is used in its ordinary sense, viz., a road with houses in s. 156: on each side. This was so held upon the corresponding words of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 61, s. 28 (R. v. Fulford (1864), 33 L. J. M. C. 122; 28 J. P. 357). And see Thomas v. Roberts (1878), 43 J. P. 574; and R. v. Platts (1880), 49 L. J. Q. B. 848; 44 J. P. 765, decided with reference to s. 66 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847. But s. 156 has been repealed by 51 & 52 Vict. c. 52, post, p. 787, and in that Act the word "street" would appear to have the meaning assigned to it by the above definition. See s. 2 of that Act, but see also note (c) under ibid., s. 3.

The word street in s. 157 is used with reference to new streets. The section in s. 157. confers power to make byelaws with respect to the level, width and construction of new streets, and the doubt which has arisen as to whether the expression is to be interpreted according to its ordinary meaning or as above defined has given rise to some confusion. In Baker v. Portsmouth Corporation (1878), 3 Ex. D. 1, 157; 42 J. P. 278, the court were of opinion that the power to make byelaws with respect to the construction of streets included a power to regulate by a byelaw the construction of buildings by the side of a street, e.g., to provide that no such building should be erected until the street had been constructed to the authority's approval; and this view was approved by the House of Lords in Robinson v. Barton Eccles L. B. (1883), 8 App. Cas. 798; 48 J. P. 276. It must not be assumed, however, as a result of these cases that the power to make "new street" byelaws is limited to new "streets" in the ordinary and popular sense of that term, i.e., to new "ways" which have, or are intended in the immediate future to have, houses erected by the side or sides thereof; and it has been held that such byelaws apply to anything which is a street within the definition clause in this section and which is proposed to be laid out and constructed for the first time, e.g., a narrow path giving access to cottages at the far end, but not at present intended to have houses built by its side (Att.-Gen. v. Gibb, [1909] 2 Ch. 264; 73 J. P. 343). See also R. v. Goole L. B., [1891] 2 Q. B. 212; 55 J. P. 535, where it was held that the byelaws as to the width of new streets applied to passages proposed to be laid out at the back of rows of new houses.

Although it has been held in many cases that an old highway may become for certain purposes a new street by the mere erection of houses on one or both sides of it, whereby it becomes for the first time a street in the ordinary or popular sense (see, for example, Pound v. Plumstead Board of Works (1871), L. R. 7 Q. B. 183; Dryden v. Putney Overseers (1876), 1 Ex. D. 223; 40 J. P. 263; Robinson v. Barton Eccles L. B., supra; Att.-Gen. v. Rufford, [1899] 1 Ch. 537; 63 J. P. 232; Clerkenwell Vestry v. Edmondson, [1902] 1 K. B. 336; 66 J. P. 324), yet the mere erection of houses does not amount to the laying out of such old highway as a new street within the meaning of the byelaws, for the laying out of a street

Section 4.

“Old street”

involves some physical interference with or something done on the highway itself. Accordingly, it has been held that the mere erection of houses by the side of an old highway does not make it incumbent on the person building such houses to widen the highway to the width prescribed by the byelaws for the laying out of new streets. See Devonport Corporation v. Tozer, [1903] 1 Ch. 759; 67 J. P. 269; Att.-Gen. v. Gibb, supra; Att.-Gen. v. Dorin, [1912] 1 Ch. 369; 76 J. P. 181. These cases remove much of the practical difficulty which had been felt as to the precise point of time at which an old highway became a new street so as to involve an obligation to widen it. Much of the confusion existing on this subject arose from the cases decided under the Metropolis Management Acts, for under those statutes the liability of frontagers to pay paving expenses depends upon whether a way, new or old, has become a new street by the erection of buildings in it to such an extent as to give it for the first time the character of a street in the ordinary sense, and this was of course a question of fact in every case. The following metropolitan cases on this subject may be referred to: R. v. Dayman (1857), 7 E. & B. 672; R. v. Islington Vestry (1858), E. B. & E. 743; R. v. Fulford (1864), 33 L. J. M. C. 122; 28 J. P. 357; Dodd v. St. Pancras Vestry (1869), 34 J. P. 517; North London Rail. Co. v. Islington Vestry (1872), 37 J. P. 341; Islington Vestry v. Barrett (1874), L. R. 9 Q. B. 278; 38 J. P. 198; Bowles v. Islington Vestry (1875), 39 J. P. 757; R. v. Shiel (1884), 49 J. P. 68; 50 L. T. 590; Wilson v. Camberwell Vestry, [1892] 1 Q. B. 1; 56 J. P. 167; Camberwell Vestry v. Crystal Palace Co., [1892] 2 Q. B. 33; 57 J. P. 5; Davis v. Greenwich Board of Works, [1895] 2 Q. B. 219; 59 J. P. 517; White v. Fulham Vestry (1896), 60 J. P. 327; 74 L. T. 425; Battersea Vestry v. Palmer (1896), 66 L. J. Q. B. 77; 60 J. P. 774; Arter v. Hammersmith Vestry, [1897] 1 Q. B. 646; 61 J. P. 279; Crosse v. Wandsworth Vestry (1898), 62 J. P. 807; 79 L. T. 351; Allen v. Fulham Vestry, [1899] 1 Q. B. 681; 63 J. P. 212; Simmonds v. Fulham Vestry, [1900] 2 Q. B. 188; 64 J. P. 548; Property Exchange, Ltd. v. Wandsworth Board of Works, [1902] 2 K. B. 61; 66 J. P. 435.

In addition to the metropolitan cases above mentioned there are other cases which have arisen outside the metropolis and decide that it is a question of fact whether a place has become a “new street.” See, for example, Robinson v. Barton Eccles L. B., supra; Fellowes v. Sedgley U. D. C. (1906), 70 J. P. 412; 4 L. G. R. 970; Greenwood v. Queensbury U. D. C. (1906), 3 Architects L. R. 145; Att.-Gen. v. Dorin, supra. But, of course, the question of fact can only arise after it has been determined in what sense the word “street” has been used in the particular section under consideration. See Eccles v. Wirral R. S. A. (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 107; 50 J. P. 596. And it is to be observed that the court will always inquire whether there has been any evidence to justify the finding of justices on the facts. See Williams v. Powning (1883), 47 J. P. 486; 48 L. T. 672; Midland Rail. Co. v. Watton (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 30; 50 J. P. 405.

street.

Whether a piece of ground by the side of a street forms part of it or not is a question of fact (Great Crosby U. D. C. v. Bell (1913), 77 J. P. 37; Le Neve v. Mile End Old Town Vestry, infra).

“Street” in

The word street as used in the statutes incorporated by the P. H. A., 1875, must in general be interpreted with reference to the definition of the term contained in those Acts respectively (per Lord BLACKBURN, in Portsmouth Corporation v. Smith (1885), 10 App. Cas. 364; 49 J. P. 676. And see Curtis v. Embery (1872), L. R. 7 Ex. 369; Maddock v. Wallasey L. B. (1886), 55 L. J. Q. B. 267; 50 J. P. 404; Att.-Gen. v. Rufford, supra. In Maddock v. Wallasey L. B., the definition of a street in the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, was held not to include an open tract of land above mean high water mark which belonged to the owner of enclosed land fronting the shore. It appeared that the inhabitants had been accustomed to pass and re-pass along this shore, and at high tide had been in the habit of going upon the tract of land in question, but had not crossed in any defined track. The shore itself is not a highway and presumably not a street. See Llandudno U. D. C. v. Woods, [1899] 2 Ch. 705; 63 J. P. 775.

Newman v. Baker (1860), 8 C. B. (N.S.) 200, decided upon the Metropolitan Building Act, 1855, may be referred to, but it throws little, if any, light on the construction of the text. Metropolitan Board of Works v. Nathan (1885), 50 J. P. 502; 54 L. T. 423, decided with reference to the same Act, shows that there may be a place with houses on both sides, which is, nevertheless, not laid out as a street within the meaning of that Act. In that case artisans' dwellings had been erected opening into an approach 100 feet long and sixteen feet wide, entered from a public street through a gateway ten feet wide, over which one of the buildings was carried. A roadway had previously existed on the site, with warehouses abutting thereon, and the gateway included the site of a former gateway which had been pulled down and altered to a greater width. The approach did not afford communication with any other public street, and was for the sole use and convenience of the tenants of the dwelling, to the exclusion of the public, no right of way having ever been dedicated to the public. It was held that the approach had not been laid out "as a street for foot traffic only." See also Daw v. London C. C. (1890), 59 L. J. M. C. 112; 54 J. P. 502; London C. C. v. Davis (1895), 64 L. J. M. C. 212; 59 J. P. 583. All these decisions were considered, and Wood v. London C. C. (1895), 64 L. J. M. C. 276; 59 J. P. 615, was overruled, in Armstrong v. London C. C., [1900] 1 Q. B. 416; 64 J. P. 197. In that case the appellant commenced to erect buildings on a piece of land belonging to him. According to the plan the buildings were to consist of blocks of flats erected in a quadrangle form with an ornamental garden in the centre of the quadrangle formed by the blocks. The approach was to be by means of a carriageway running round the garden. Upon each side of the carriageway blocks were to be erected. Each of the blocks was to have a separate entrance from the carriageway. The appellant did not propose to dedicate any public right of way over the land to the use of the public, but intended to erect gates at the entrance to the approach, and to keep a porter there to open the gates when necessary to allow persons going to and from the flats to pass, and the carriageway was to be for the use of the tenants of the flats and of persons visiting them. It was held that the appellant had commenced to lay out or form a street within the meaning of the similar definition in the London Building Act, 1894. The decision in Armstrong v. London C. C., supra, was followed and applied in London C. C. v. Davis (1904), 68 J. P. 520; 91 L. T. 555.

The word street as used in the Metropolis Management Acts is defined in words identical with those in the text. For a case in which the term was interpreted with reference to the definition, see Hampstead Vestry v. Hoopel (1885), 15 Q. B. D. 652; 49 J. P. 741; and see Hampstead Vestry v. Cotton (1886), 12 App. Cas. 1; 51 J. P. 340.

A space of ground from thirty-three to fifty-eight feet wide between the footway and the carriageway, which had always been used by the inhabitants of the houses facing it for placing carriages on and the like, paying a small rent for such user to the owner of the soil, but which had always been used by the public for passage, subject only to the user by the inhabitants of the houses, was held not to be part of a street, having been only partially dedicated to the public (Le Neve v. Mile End Old Town Vestry (1858), 22 J. P. 657; 8 El. & Bl. 1054).

(b) The words "not being a turnpike road" were repealed by the S. L. R. A., Turnpikes. 1898, turnpikes being obsolete.

(c) See Arnell v. Regent's Canal Co. (1852—1854), 12 C. B. 697; 14 C. B. 564, Bridges. as to how far a canal bridge was brought within the terms of a local paving Act. When a street passes over a canal by a bridge, the bridge may, for some purposes, be deemed to be a street (per WIGHTMAN, J., in Beaver v. Manchester Corporation, (1857), 26 L. J. Q. B. 311). When a street is carried over a railway by means of a bridge, it is only the street, and not the bridge itself, which vests in the local authority under s. 149 (G. E. Rail. Co. v. Hackney District Board of Works (per Lord WATSON) (1883), 8 App. Cas. 687; 48 J. P. 52).

A county bridge is one the duty of repairing which is cast by law on the inhabitants of the county at large. This duty extends to every public bridge erected before 1803, unless it is transferred to some persons or person or corporation by custom, prescription, or tenure of land. See hereon Att.-Gen. v. West Riding C. C. (1903), 67 J. P. 173. Bridges built since 1803 are not repairable by the county unless they have been erected in compliance with 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, s. 5, or have been declared to be so repairable pursuant to 41 & 42 Vict. c. 77, s. 21.

Note to
Section 4.

Culs-de-sac.

(d) A cul-de-sac may be a street and public highway (Souch v. East London Rail. Co. (1873), L. R. 16 Eq. 108 ; 37 J. P. 644. In a Scotch case, where by a local Act it was forbidden to lay out a new street which would terminate in a cul-de-sac, it was held that a street of sixty feet which was continued by a lane twenty feet wide was not a cul-de-sac (Stevenson v. Lee (1910), S. C. 14). In Att.-Gen. v. Antrobus, [1905] 2 Ch. 188 ; 69 J. P. 141, FARWELL, J., said that in no case has mere user by the public been held sufficient to constitute a dedication to the public of a cul-de-sac, and this dictum was cited with approval by KEKEWICH, J., in Whitehouse v. Hugh, [1906] 1 Ch. 253 ; affirmed, [1906] 2 Ch. 283. And see with reference to courts which are culs-de-sac, Att.-Gen. v. Richmond Corporation (1903), 68 J. P. 73 ; 89 L. T. 700 ; Att.-Gen. v. Chandos Land and Building Society, (1910), 74 J. P. 401 ; Josselsohn v. Weiler (1911), 75 J. P. 513 ; London C. C. v. Hughes (1911), 75 J. P. 239 ; 104 L. T. 685. So also a highway, one end of which has been legally stopped, may still be a highway (R. v. Burney (1875), 39 J. P. 599). But a way ceases to be a public highway when access to it at both ends has become impossible by reason of the legal stopping up of ways leading to it (Bailey v. Jamieson (1876), 1 C. P. D. 329 ; 40 J. P. 486 ; G. C. Rail. Co. v. Balby-with-Hexthorpe U. D. C., [1912] 2 Ch. 110 ; 76 J. P. 205).

Dedication.

A leaseholder cannot dedicate land to the use of the public without the consent of the owner of the fee. Nor can land be dedicated to the use of the public for a term of years (Corsellis v. London C. C., [1907] 1 Ch. 704 ; 71 J. P. 219). On appeal the consideration of this point did not become material, [1908] 1 Ch. 13 ; 71 J. P. 561. And see R. v. Wicklow C. C., [1908] 2 I. R., at p. 116. Where user by the public is the only evidence of dedication, knowledge on the part of the owner must be proved, but such knowledge may be inferred from the circumstances of the case (Webb v. Baldwin (1911), 75 J. P. 564). See as to dedication where land is in settlement, Farquhar v. Newbury R. D. C., [1909] 1 Ch. 12 ; 73 J. P. 1. And as to dedication by statutory bodies, such as canal and railway companies, see the cases cited in the notes to s. 148, post, p. 268.

"The Act expressly calls places streets whether they are public property or private property, and whether the public have any rights over them or have no rights over them" (per JESSEL, M.R., in Taylor v. Oldham Corporation (1876), 4 Ch. D., at p. 407). And see Midland Rail. Co. v. Watton, supra ; Hill v. Wallasey L. B., cited in notes to s. 57 ; Armstrong v. London C. C., supra.

"House."

"House" includes schools, also factories and other buildings in which more than twenty persons are employed at one time :

The words in italics were repealed by 41 & 42 Vict. c. 16, s. 107, Sched. 6. How far this term is extended to any house remains for judicial decision. It is not to be read into s. 42 of this Act (post, p. 106), and therefore a steam laundry, although containing a dwelling-house for the manageress and for the clerk in charge, is not a "house" for the purpose of the removal of "house refuse," under that section (per CHARLES, J., in London and Provincial Laundry Co. v. Willesden L. B., [1892] 2 Q. B. 271 ; 56 J. P. 696).

generally.

There is no definition of a "house" here, but only an extension of the term. Reference, therefore, may be made to the cases upon the parliamentary and municipal franchises, and upon settlement under the Poor Law, for illustration of the word "house." Prima facie a house means a dwelling-house (Surman v. Darley (1845), 14 M. & W. 181) ; or a building calculated to be used as such (Nunn v. Denton (1845), 8 Scott N. R. 794 ; Daniel v. Coulsting, ib. 949) ; but the above interpretation extends the signification, and it is presumed that the term would signify any building in which persons are employed. It has recently been decided that it is a question of fact whether particular premises are a "house" within s. 62 of this Act. See Wootten v. Bishop (1907), 71 J. P. 334 ; 96 L. T. 705.

premises.

Buildings used as places of business, in which no one slept, and which were originally occupied as dwelling-houses and had been converted into business premises, and which were capable, with slight internal alterations, of being fitted for use as dwelling-houses, were held to be "houses" within the meaning of a local Act (Lewin v. End, [1906] A. C. 299 ; 70 J. P. 268 ; see also Lewin v. Newnes (1904), 68 J. P. 164 ; 90 L. T. 160).

Note to
Section 4.

A day school where there were no boarders and where none of the members of the staff resided, and in which only two maidservants dwelt, was held to be a house within s. 91 (5) of this Act (Wimbledon U. D. C. v. Hastings (1902), 67 J. P. 45 ; 87 L. T. 118).

Day school.

A church was held not to be a house in Angell v. Paddington Vestry (1868), Churches and L. R. 3 Q. B. 714 ; 32 J. P. 742. But this case had reference to the section of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862, which renders the owner of a house liable for the expenses of paving, etc. A church may be a house within the meaning of a byelaw or order prescribing a building line (per MALINS, V.-C., in Folkestone Corporation v. Woodward (1872), L. R. 15 Eq. 159). A dissenting chapel was held to be a house within the meaning of the Metropolis Management Acts (Caiger v. St. Mary, Islington Vestry (1881), 50 L. J. M. C. 59 ; 45 J. P. 570). The ground of this decision was that the chapel had not been consecrated, and thus dedicated to permanent and unalterable uses. This decision was followed in Wright v. Ingle (1885), 16 Q. B. D. 379 ; 50 J. P. 436. There it was held that the word "house" includes every building which is capable of being used as a human habitation. If a building, which is physically capable of being so used, is prevented, either by common law or by statute, from ever being put to such a use, it is exempted from the liability to contribute to the expense of paving a street in the metropolis. Thus, a consecrated church of the Established Church of England, is exempted, because, by reason of its consecration, it becomes, by the common law, for ever incapable of being used as a habitation for man. But a leasehold chapel, vested in trustees, in trust to permit it to be used as a place of religious worship for Wesleyans, is a house, because, by the consent of the landlord, the trustees, and the cestuis que trustent, the trust may at any moment be put an end to. And see the note to the definition of the expression "owner," ante, p. 10.

The word "house" under the P. H. A., 1848, was held to apply to a toll-house on a turnpike road (Tunstall Turnpike Roads (Trustees of) v. Lowndes (1856), 20 J. P. 374).

In Hole v. Commissioners of Milton (1867), 31 J. P. 804, it was held that buildings and yards used for purposes of business did not come within the description of "house" (for the purposes of a rate made under a local Improvement Act), unless they were also within the curtilage of the house ; but that gardens or orchards, subordinate to the occupation of the house as a residence, and occupied with the house as ancillary thereto, were so included within the word "house." Therefore, a mill which opened into a yard adjoining a house, and which had internal communication with the outbuilding and house, was held to be part of the house and properly included in the rates.

A publichouse was bounded on one side by a street, and in front by a vacant piece of ground not fenced off from the street, and separated from the house only by a narrow foot pavement also without fence, which was ordinarily used by the public as a thoroughfare, though sometimes closed. The piece of land had been treated as passing to the lessee by every demise of the publichouse since 1802 ; it was used by customers of the publichouse, and it furnished the only means of approach for vehicles to the front of the house. It was held that the piece of land came within the definition of a curtilage, and was part of the house within the meaning of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 92 (Marson v. L. C. & D. Rail. Co. (1868), L. R. 6 Eq. 101 ; 32 J. P. 565 ; following Lord Robert Grosvenor v. Hampstead Junction Rail. Co. (1857), 1 De G. & J. 446). See also, as to the meaning of the word "curtilage," Asquith v. Griffin (1884), 48 J. P. 724 ; Pilbrow v. St. Leonard's, Shoreditch (Vestry of), [1895] 1 Q. B. 433 ; 59 J. P. 68 ; St. Martin's (Vestry of) v. Bird, [1895] 1 Q. B. 428 ; 60 J. P. 52 ; Harris v. Scurfield, [1904] 68 J. P. 516 ; and Brass v. London C. C., [1904] 2 K. B. 336.

In Wright v. Wallasey L. B. (1887), 18 Q. B. D. 783 ; 52 J. P. 4, it was held that the word "house" in s. 10 of the Cemeteries Clauses Act, 1847, did not include the curtilage.

In R. v. Warwickshire JJ. (1851), 17 L. T. (o.s.) 183, a coach-house and stables adjoining, and occupied with a dwelling-house, and forming part of the same premises, were held to be part of the “ house ” within the meaning of a local Paving Act.

As to what constitutes a “ dwelling-house,” see Lawson v. Fraser (1881), 8 L. R. Ir. 55, where premises used as a corn store and kiln, part of which had formerly been used as a dwelling-place, and in which the respondent occasionally slept, were held to be a dwelling-house. A public building in the nature of an hotel for poor men (Rowton House) was held not to be a “ dwelling-house to be inhabited, or adapted to be inhabited, by persons of the working class ” (London C. C. v. Davis (1897), 62 J. P. 68). See also Chester Waterworks Co. v. Chester Union (1908), 72 J. P. 121, where upon the construction of a local Waterworks Act and the Waterworks Clauses Acts, a workhouse was held to be a dwelling-house, and Bristol Guardians v. Bristol Waterworks Co., [1914] A. C. 379 ; 78 J. P. 217, where a similar building was held not to be a “ private dwelling-house.”

“ Building ” is a word of wider signification than “ house ” (see per TURNER, L.J., in Grosvenor v. Hampstead Junction Rail. Co., supra).

In Stevens v. Gowray (1859), 7 C. B. (N.S.) 99, a wooden structure, intended to be used as a shop, of considerable size and likely to last for some time, resting on joists, but having no fastenings or foundations in masonry, and capable of being lifted from the ground, was held to be a building within 18 & 19 Vict. c. 122. In Poplar Board of Works v. Knight (1858), El. B. & E. 408, it was held that a house simply built on the surface of the ground, without any foundations in the ordinary sense, was nevertheless a building within 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, s. 204, which prohibited the erection of buildings over sewers. In Morish v. Harris (1865), L. R. 1 C. P. 155, a structure built of stone, having four walls and a door, which was used by the tenant for keeping guano and other manures, which he used on adjoining land, was held to be a building within the Reform Act, 1832, s. 27 ; but the term, as used in that Act, does not include everything which can be called a building ; “ it ought to be in some degree adapted both to be used by man, either for residence or for the industry to which the statute relates, and also to have the degree of durability which is included in the idea of building ” (per ERLE, C.J., in Powell v. Boraston (1865), 29 J. P. 550 ; 18 C. B. (N.S.) 175). In Watson v. Cotton (1847), 5 C. B. 51, decided with reference to the same Act, a shed described as standing against a wooden paling, but not fastened thereto, and consisting of six posts put into the ground supporting a tarpaulin, which formed the roof, one side being boarded up with boards nailed to the posts, the structure being used to put barrows and posts into, was held to be a building.

In R. v. Gregory (1833), 3 L. J. M. C. 25, an open shop roofed in, connecting the shop front with a newly-built house, was held to be a building within the meaning of an Act which prohibited the erection of buildings within a given distance from a roadway.

An erection made of wood, thirty feet long and thirteen feet wide, was brought along the streets on wheels and put at the corner of a new street. It had spouts with a fall-pipe, and a supply of gas, and was used as a butcher's shop :—Held, that it was a new building (Richardson v. Brown (1885), 49 J. P. 661).

tories.

In Bowes v. Low (1870), L. R. 9 Eq. 636, a vinery attached to a wall was held to be a building. But a conservatory, 15 feet long by 9 feet deep, constructed of wood and glass without any heating apparatus and built against the side of a house, was held not to be a building within the meaning of a byelaw requiring buildings to be erected of stone, brick, etc. (Hibbert v. Acton L. B. (1889), 5 T. L. R. 274). A greenhouse is a building within the meaning of the Prescription Act, 1832 (Clifford v. Holt, [1899] 1 Ch. 698 ; 63 J. P. 22). See also the cases cited under the Public Health (Building in Streets) Act, 1888, s. 3.

Walls.

Whether a high wall is a building, quære. It was considered by Lord HATHERLEY, in Child v. Douglas (1854), 5 De G. M. & G. 739, that a dwarf wall forming a fence was not (see Weston v. Arnold (1873), L. R. 8 Ch. 1084, in reference to a party-wall). A local Act prohibited the erection of all houses “ and every other building whatever,” within 30 feet of the centre of a road :

—Held, by the Court of Session in Scotland (Lord YOUNG, diss.) that this prohibition did not apply to a parapet wall 1 foot in height surrounded by a railing 5 feet 3 inches in height (Partick (Commissioners of) v. Great Western Steam Laundry (1886), 13 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th series) 500). As to whether fence walls of a canal being erected in a public place constituted a public building, see Arnell v. Regent's Canal Co. (1852—1854), 12 C. B. 697; 14 C. B. 564. In Ellis v. Plumstead Board of Works (1893), 57 J. P. 359; 68 L. T. 291, it was held that a wall, 9 inches thick and 7 feet 8 inches high above the level of the ground, and 14 inches thick below that level and 20 feet long, was a building, structure, or erection within s. 75 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862, not being merely required as a boundary wall or fence. But the question depends on the height of the wall and the purpose for which it is built. The forecourt of a house in a street had for many years been bounded on the side nearest the street by a dwarf wall between 2 and 3 feet high. The owner pulled down the dwarf wall and built on its site a wall 11 feet high, which was used as a screen to exhibit advertisements, and also to serve as a boundary to the forecourt. It was held that the dwarf wall was not, but that the substituted wall was a “building, structure, or erection” within the meaning of the same section (Lavy v. London C. C., [1895] 2 Q. B. 577; 59 J. P. 630).

Movable seating consisting of tiers of platforms capable of accommodating Platforms. about three thousand persons erected from time to time as required for exhibitions in the Agricultural Hall, was held not to be a “building structure or work” within s. 145 of the London Building Act, 1894 (Venner v. McDonnell, [1897] 1 Q. B. 421; 61 J. P. 181; followed in Handover v. Meeson (1903), 67 J. P. 313).

The erection of hoardings for advertisements was held to be a breach of a Hoardings. covenant not to erect or make any building or erection on certain demised premises (Pocock v. Gilham (1883), 1 C. & E. 104). But see Foster v. Fraser, [1893] 3 Ch. 158; 57 J. P. 646). In Wood v. Cooper, [1894] 3 Ch. 671, the erection of a substantial trellis-work screen, intended to be permanent, was held to be a breach of a similar covenant. An advertising company surrounded on three of its sides a piece of ground with boarded walls or hoardings raised to a height of from 13 to 19 feet. These hoardings were stayed, fastened and tied together and strengthened on the inner side. The space enclosed was used for the preparation of wood for other hoardings. It was held that the structure was not a new building within the byelaws (Slaughter v. Sunderland Corporation (1891), 60 L. J. M. C. 91; 55 J. P. 519). In Boyce v. Paddington Borough Council, [1903] 1 Ch. 109; 67 J. P. 23, BUCKLEY, J., held that a screen proposed to be put up upon a disused churchyard managed as an open space, for the purpose of preventing an adjoining landowner from acquiring by prescription a right to access of light to windows of his houses overlooking the churchyard, would not be a building within s. 5 of the Metropolitan Open Spaces Act, 1881, and s. 3 of the Disused Burial Grounds Act, 1884. The Court of Appeal reversed this decision (see [1903] 2 Ch. 557; 68 J. P. 49) on the ground that in erecting the screen the council would be holding and administering the ground otherwise than for the purpose of its enjoyment by the public in an open condition and for no other purpose, as prescribed by s. 5 of the Metropolitan Open Spaces Act, 1881. The House of Lords reversed the decision of the Court of Appeal and restored that of BUCKLEY, J. (Paddington Borough Council v. Att.-Gen., [1906] A. C. 1; 70 J. P. 41).

Three caravans, a shooting gallery and steam roundabout were held not to be Temporary “structures or erections of a movable or temporary character” within 45 Vict. structures. c. 14, s. 13 (Hall v. Smallpiece (1890), 59 L. J. M. C. 97; 54 J. P. 710). So, also, a builder’s pay office constructed of wood and roofed with zinc and placed upon iron wheels for the purpose of enabling it to be wheeled about to any place where building operations were being carried on (London C. C. v. Pearce, [1892] 2 Q. B. 109; 56 J. P. 796); and a bungalow constructed of wood and corrugated iron and erected on a piece of land for the purpose only of exhibition and sale and not for occupation (London C. C. v. Humphreys, [1894] 2 Q. B. 755; 58 J. P. 734). Temporary structures, intended for storing workmen’s tools, and for the purpose of a brick kiln, were held not to be buildings within the meaning of byelaws of a local board (Fielding v. Rhyl Improvement Commissioners (1878), 3 C. P. D. 272; 42 J. P. 311). So also a wooden weighing machine house open for the use of the public during the summer months erected on an esplanade at the seaside as a shelter for a weighing machine, and containing also a table and two chairs, was held not to be a new building within the meaning of byelaws under s. 157, post, p. 324, and a movable wooden refreshment stall open during the summer months in the same locality was likewise held not to be a new building (Southend-on-Sea Corporation v. Archer; Same v. Romanis (1901), 73 L. J. K. B. 328; 65 J. P. 292; and see Dublin Corporation v. Irish Church Missions, [1901] 2 I. R. 387; Dublin Corporation v. Allen (1904), 38 Ir. L. T. 78). Again, a portable theatre, constructed of wood, and erected for a short period only, where the intention of the proprietor was to move to another locality within a short time, was held not to be a "building" within the meaning of the P. H. A. 1875, s. 157, or of byelaws framed in pursuance of that section (Newell v. Ormskirk U. D. C. (1907), 71 J. P. 119). See also as to "temporary buildings," s. 27 of the P. H. A., 1907, post, p. 1111.

Section 4.

A covenant in a purchase deed provided that buildings should not be erected beyond a given line of frontage. It was held that bay windows projecting beyond the line, and carried from the foundation up to the roof, were buildings within the meaning of the covenant (Lord Manners v. Johnson (1875), 1 Ch. D. 673).

buildings.

The word building is not restricted to erections above the surface of a street. Thus, arches over which a roadway was made, and which were used as storehouses, were held to be buildings within s. 7 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847 (Thompson v. Sunderland Gas Co. (1877), 2 Ex. D. 429; 42 J. P. 198; and see Schweder v. Worthing Gas Co. (1911), 76 J. P. 3; 105 L. T. 670; Schweder v. Worthing Gas Co. (No. 2), [1913] 1 Ch. 118). So also street boxes for electric lighting purposes and reservoirs have been held to be buildings, structures or works within s. 145 of the London Building Act, 1894 (Whitechapel District Board of Works v. Crow (1901), 65 J. P. 463; 84 L. T. 595; Charing Cross and Strand Electricity Supply Corporation v. Woodthorpe (1903), 67 J. P. 286; 88 L. T. 772; County of London Electric Supply Co., Ltd. v. Perkins (1908), 72 J. P. 133; 98 L. T. 870; Moran v. Marsland, [1909] 1 K. B. 744; 73 J. P. 114).

building."

As to what is a "new building," see the notes to ss. 157, 159, post, pp. 324, 359.

building.

Where a bedroom had been erected in place of a conservatory, the external wall of the house having been raised for the purpose, and the justices upon a summons for making an "addition to an existing building" without complying with certain byelaws, held that there was no addition to an existing building on the ground that the bedroom occupied no more space than the conservatory did, the court sent back the case to the justices, holding that this fact was not, per se, conclusive (Meadows v. Taylor (1890), 24 Q. B. D. 717; 54 J. P. 757).

"Drain."

"Drain" means any drain of and used for the drainage of one building only, or premises within the same curtilage, and made merely for the purpose of communicating therefrom with a cesspool or other like receptacle for drainage, or with a sewer into which the drainage of two or more buildings or premises occupied by different persons is conveyed:

As to the effect of the word "means," see ante, pp. 6, 8.

There may be instances of drains not comprehended within this definition, as where there is a direct communication from a house to a river or canal or the sea.

generally.

In Coulton v. Ambler (1844), 13 M. & W. 403, a navigable river or cut was held not to be a "public or parish drain" within the meaning of a local drainage Act. The word drain in the Lands Drainage Act, 1847, was held to include an underground drain (Bowes v. Watson (1879), 44 J. P. 364; 42 L. T. 27). A dumb well, i.e., one into which waste water flows through a pipe and thence percolates into the soil, was held not to be a "drain or watercourse" within s. 67 of the Highway Act, 1835 (Croft v. Rickmansworth Highway Board (1888), 39 Ch. D. 272). And see Croysdale v. Sunbury-on-Thames U. D. C., [1898] 2 Ch. 515;

62 J. P. 520. A pipe, running through a bank which divided the defendant's land from a highway, which from a time beyond living memory had been maintained there by a highway authority, and through which water which accumulated upon the highway flowed on the defendant's land, was held to be a "drain" within the meaning of s. 67 of the Highway Act, 1835, notwithstanding the fact that there was no defined channel into which the water coming through such pipe flowed (Att.-Gen. v. Copeland, [1902] 1 K. B. 690; 66 J. P. 420; followed in King's County C. C. v. Kennedy, [1910] 2 I. R. 544).

Note to
Section 4.

The effect of this and the next definition is, roughly, that a drain is that which receives the drainage of one house, while a sewer is that which receives the drainage of two or more. But the word used in the text is "building"; and where a pipe serves two or more houses, it must, therefore, be considered whether the houses do in point of fact constitute more than one building. Thus two "One build- semi-detached houses may constitute one building only (Hedley v. Webb, [1901] ing." 2 Ch. 126; 65 J. P. 425; see, however, Harvie v. South Devon Rail. Co. (1874), 32 L. T. 1), but it is in every case a question of fact whether they are, or are not, one building so as to make the pipe draining them a "drain." The court can lay down no general rule upon the point (Humphery v. Young, [1903] 1 K. B. 44; 67 J. P. 34). But in districts where the P. H. A., 1890, is in force when two or more houses belonging to different owners are connected with a public sewer by a single private drain, such drain may for certain purposes be treated as a drain and not as a sewer. See s. 19 of that Act, post, p. 831.

The drainage of the Lowther Arcade (a passage with a gate at each end, arched over by one roof and containing a range of twenty-five houses and shops) was effected by a construction running down the centre of the passage, and receiving the drainage of all these houses and shops. It was held that the construction was not a drain but a sewer, and that the Arcade was not one building nor premises within the same curtilage (St. Martin's-in-the-Fields (Vestry of) v. Bird (1894), 71 L. T. 432; affirmed, [1895] 1 Q. B. 428; 60 J. P. 52). Buildings consisting of forty-six sets of apartments divided into two blocks, which were separated by a causeway 20 feet wide, were erected without any plans being submitted to the local authority. The drainage was by means of twelve branch drains running from each set of apartments into a main drain under the causeway, which communicated with a sewer within 100 feet of the blocks. The causeway opened into a public thoroughfare, and access to one of the blocks was obtained from the causeway and to the other only from the thoroughfare. It was held by MATHEW and CHARLES, JJ., that the two blocks of buildings were premises within the same curtilage, and that the main drain was a drain and not a sewer, and repairable by the owner of the buildings (Pilbrow v. Shoreditch Vestry, [1895] 1 Q. B. 33; affirmed (RIGBY, L.J., diss.), [1895] 1 Q. B. 433; 59 J. P. 68). The decision in St. Martin's-in-the-Fields (Vestry of) v. Bird, supra, was followed, and the Shoreditch Case distinguished in a case where the circumstances were as follows: The appellants were the owners of eighteen dwelling-houses, Nos. 7 to 25 in No. 1 Court, Eyre Lane, Sheffield. The said houses were back-to-back houses, and Nos. 7 to 13 thereof formed part of a block, and Nos. 14 to 25 thereof were in one block; the said Nos. 7 to 13 faced the said Nos. 14 to 19, and between them was an open space of ground with a pavement on either side. Nos. 20 to 25 faced the boundary wall on the south-east side of the court, and between them and the said boundary wall was also an open space of ground with a pavement on the side thereof. The main entrance to the court was from a partially enclosed space of ground, to which an entrance was obtained from one of the main thoroughfares, and the court could also be entered by means of two narrow passages made between certain of the houses, Nos. 7 to 13. There were situate in this court two ashpits and thirteen water-closets for the use of the tenants. The slop water from the sink of each house was carried by a separate channel cut in the pavement at right angles to each house into a long channel at the side of the pavement in the court. By means of these channels the drainage was carried into two gullies in the court, and thence into the main sewer outside of the court. The court held that the eighteen dwelling-houses were not premises within the same curtilage (see Harris v. Scurfield (1904), 68 J. P. 516;

"within the same curtilage."

Note to
Section 4.

91 L. T. 536). In the course of his judgment in the last-mentioned case, ALVERSTONE, L.C.J., said : "There is no definition of a curtilage which would include the case of a number of houses separately occupied by different people, simply because there is a common access and to some extent common accommodation." See also Brass v. London C. C., [1904] 2 K. B. 336 ; 68 J. P. 365, and cases cited therewith, on p. 21, ante.

"Sewer."

"Sewer" includes sewers and drains of every description, except drains to which the word "drain" interpreted as aforesaid applies, and except drains vested in or under the control of any authority having the management of roads and not being a local authority under this Act.

As to the word "includes," see ante, p. 6.

highway

As to the words in this definition which except from it certain highway drains, see Williamson v. Durham R. D. C., Rickarby v. New Forest R. D. C., and cases cited therewith, on pp. 30, 31, post.

"Sewers"
generally.

"The word 'drain' as used in the Public Health Act evidently means a passage for sewage from a single house only which may afterwards fall into a cesspool or larger sewer. The word 'sewer' comes from the word to 'sew,' i.e., to drain, and has a much more extended signification, embracing works on the largest scale, such as draining the fens of Lincolnshire by means of canals, etc. In the common sense of the term it means a large and generally, though not always, underground passage for fluid and feculent matter from a house or houses to some other locality. But it does not comprise a cesspool for the purpose of retaining the sewage whether as a simple deposit or to be converted into manure or other useful purposes" : per KINDERSLEY, V.-C., in Sutton v. Norwich Corporation (1858), 27 L. J. Ch. 739. See further as to cesspools, p. 28, post.

presupposes
outfall.

It would seem that a line of pipes cannot be a sewer for the purposes of this Act if it has no effective outfall, e.g., if it ends in a cesspool with no proper outlet, or a blind ditch, which does not convey away the contents of the pipes, but merely leaves them to soak into the earth around. See Meader v. West Coves L. B., and cases cited therewith, on p. 28, post.

"Streams" becoming

An ancient tidal fleet or haven upon which barges floated at high tide, was held not to be a sewer, although it became offensive and injurious to health by reason of the houses in a town discharging sewage into it (Pentney v. Lynn Commissioners (1865), 12 L. T. 818).

A stream supplied by the drainage, natural and artificial, of cultivated land, and receiving the drainage of two or three houses in its passage to the river into which it flowed, was held not to be a sewer (R. v. Godmanchester L. B. (1866), L. R. 1 Q. B. 328 ; 30 J. P. 164). This case may be compared with a later one where the sewage of certain houses drained into a sewer, and, after passing through the sewer was, for a number of years, allowed to fall into an open watercourse which, in its turn, flowed into a brook : it was held that under the circumstances of the case the open watercourse was a sewer (Wheatcroft v. Matlock L. B. (1885), 52 L. T. 356). And a natural watercourse into which for many years a large number of houses had drained, was held to be a sewer in Falconar v. South Shields Corporation (1895), 11 T. L. R. 223. In Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation v. Houseman (1898), 63 J. P. 85, a tidal stream largely polluted by sewage was held to be a sewer : BYRNE, J., said : "I think it is possible to form a sewer without the construction of any artificial work. If, for instance, an old ditch or the bed of a watercourse from which all flow of water has been diverted is utilised for the carriage of sewage matter, such utilisation would be properly described as forming a sewer. I think a sewer may be formed within the meaning of the section either by artificial construction or by the utilisation of natural channels. It is a question of degree, and I should think that none would dispute that, if a body of sewage a hundred times as great as the natural flow of water in a stream were discharged into the channel continuously, a sewer would be formed." In West

Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board v. Reuben Gaunt & Sons, Ltd. (1903), 67 J. P. 183 ; 19 T. L. R. 140, the court held that a natural stream, or watercourse, may cease to be a stream, and may become a sewer, into which persons may acquire certain rights of drainage as against the local authority, and that it may do so even although the natural flow of water along its bed has not wholly ceased. But the court further held that the mere fact that for a number of years sewage has been discharged into a watercourse is not of itself sufficient to convert the watercourse into a sewer ; nor is the fact that the watercourse has been covered over material, unless it was done by the local authority in order to turn it into a sewer. The court further held that after the year 1861 a local authority could not convert a watercourse into a sewer merely by the illegal act of discharging sewage into it. The last-mentioned case was discussed and Falconar v. South Shields Corporation, supra, distinguished in West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board v. Preston & Sons (1905), 69 J. P. 1 ; 92 L. T. 24, where the facts were as follows : The defendants sent polluting liquids from their factory into a channel. This channel originally carried water from a well above the factory, but the defendants diverted this water supply above their factory, took it into their mill, and discharged it in a polluted state into the channel close to their factory. The channel ran from the factory past certain cottages ; then joining a stream, fell with the stream into a river. Fifty or sixty cottages emptied their sewage into the channel below the factory until 1892, when a sewage scheme was put into operation for the district. Two cottages still discharged slop water into the channel, and two or three small watercourses fell into it below the factory. A county court judge held that the channel was a "stream" within the meaning of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, s. 20, and that the defendants had committed an offence under ibid., s. 4. On appeal the Divisional Court held that a stream within the meaning of the Act may be either a natural or an artificial one ; and that the court was not prepared to differ from the conclusion of the county court judge that the channel was a stream, since (apart from the existing watercourses below) pure water would still flow along the course but for the acts of the defendants. In an earlier case a county court judge, in proceedings taken under Part 3 of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, found that the brook in question was a stream within the meaning of ibid., s. 20 ; but he did not expressly find that it was not a "sewer" within the meaning of this Act, and it was objected that his decision was for that reason ambiguous ; but the Divisional Court held that the question was in fact raised before the judge, and was in terms decided by him (West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board v. Yorkshire Indigo, Scarlet and Colour Dyers, Limited (1903), 67 J. P. 80). In a Scotch case, it was held that an open stream which flowed through a borough, and was polluted by sewage from outside the borough, but into which no part of the borough sewage was discharged, was not a sewer (Glasgow, Yoker and Clyde Bank Rail. Co. v. Macindoe (1896), 24 R. 160).

A bourne flow or intermittent stream issuing from the chalk, was held not to be a sewer in Pearce v. Croydon R. D. C. (1910), 74 J. P. 431 ; 8 L. G. R. 909. But the discharge of sewage into the channel of such a stream may convert it into a sewer (Att.-Gen. v. Leves Corporation, [1911] 2 Ch. 495 ; 76 J. P. 1). A natural underground watercourse which ran through the lands and grounds of adjoining owners in a culvert or piping constructed by the owners of the several lands, was held not to be a sewer in Shepherd v. Croft, [1911] 1 Ch. 521.

An iron pipe temporarily laid down to carry away the effluent water from sewage works is a sewer (Tottenham L. B. v. Button (1886), 2 T. L. R. 828) ; a fortiori overflow a permanent line of pipes for the purpose (Waltham Holy Cross U. D. C. v. Lee Conservancy Board, Titterton v. Kingsbury Collieries, Limited, p. 29, post). Whether an "overflow" sewer is a sewer for all purposes within the meaning of the Act, quære. See Leeds and District Worsted Dyers and Finishers' Association Limited v. West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board (1906), 70 J. P. 480.

A drain running underneath three houses received the drainage, first of one, Point of and then of the other two houses, which it conveyed into a sewer (Travis v. Uttley, commenced [1894] 1 Q. B. 233 ; 58 J. P. 85). WILLS, J., said : "It is impossible to say that the part which is used for the drainage of one building is a drain, and the rest a sewer. The drain is a sewer from end to end." But in a subsequent case he recalled this opinion (Beckenham U. D. C. v. Wood (1896), 60 J. P. 490). In that case, it was decided that a pipe or line of pipes receiving the drainage of more than one building, not being premises within the same curtilage, although a sewer from below the point where it receives the drainage of more than one building, is a drain and not a sewer above that point. Where a drain of a house ran through the adjoining premises, and a sink and water gully in the latter drained into the pipe, it was held that the pipe from the point of junction was a sewer (Duncan v. Fulham (Vestry of), Times, February 11th, 1899).

In Acton L. B. v. Batten (1884), 28 Ch. D. 283 ; 49 J. P. 357, KAY, J., held that a line of pipes laid in a street for the use of all houses requiring to be connected with it was a sewer, at any rate as soon as two houses had been so connected. In Beckenham U. D. C. v. Wood, supra, CAVE, J., said : "The general rule, as I understand, is that where a drain receives the sewage of two or more houses, it is a sewer. Where it receives the sewage of one house only, it may still remain a drain, though not necessarily, because it may be a sewer, whether it takes the sewage of one house only, or no house at all. A main sewer may be laid down by the local authority in a new street where no houses are built, but where it is intended houses shall be built. Subsequently the buildings may be commenced at the lower end of the street, and when the drains of one house are connected with the main sewer, the connecting pipes will be drains, and not sewers. But the sewer itself will no less continue to be a sewer although it receives only the drainage of that one house, and consequently a sewer without a drain at all will be a sewer." This dictum of CAVE, J., was followed by NEVILLE, J., in Turner v. Handsworth U. D. C., [1909] 1 Ch. 381 ; 73 J. P. 95. It was there held that where a landowner gives notice of his intention to make a new street with a sewer under it and his plans are passed and carried out, the pipes become a sewer before they are in fact used.

A builder drained a number of houses by one common pipe into a cesspool. The cesspool overflowed, and justices made an order on the owner of one of the houses to abate the resulting nuisance. A Divisional Court reversed this decision, holding that the authority must deal with the matter. It was apparently admitted without argument that the line of pipes was a sewer ; and the court seem to have held either that, this being so, the owners had no further responsibility for liquid turned into it, or that the cesspool was part of the sewer (Pinnock v. Waterworth (1887), 51 J. P. 248). It had, however, been said in an earlier case that the definition of a sewer does not include a cesspool, reservoir, or deposit bed for collecting sewage for purposes of disposing of it (Sutton v. Norwich (Mayor, etc. of), p. 26, ante). A plaintiff built some houses having a drain leading into a line of six-inch pipes. The line of pipes was intersected by a pit or cesspool, and from thence the pipes passed under the land of a neighbouring owner. The owner cut off the pipes, causing the sewage to flow back and cause a nuisance. The defendants required the plaintiff to abate the nuisance by cleansing the cesspool, and the plaintiff thereupon commenced an action for an injunction to restrain the defendants from causing a nuisance, contending that the cesspool was part of the sewer, and vested in them under s. 13, post, p. 45. It was held that the action could not be maintained, as the cesspool was not part of the sewer (Meador v. West Cowes L. B., [1892] 3 Ch. 18). There are observations in the judgments in this case suggesting that the line of pipes leading to the cesspool was not a sewer, and if the court intended so to decide, the decision cannot be reconciled with Pinnock v. Waterworth, supra. Meador v. West Cowes L. B. was followed, however, in Button v. Tottenham U. D. C. (1898), 62 J. P. 423. In that case, the owner of certain houses constructed a series of cesspools for their drainage on his own land. He then constructed a conduit which conveyed the overflows therefrom to a larger cesspool. He was summoned for constructing the small cesspools so as to have an outlet into a sewer, namely, the conduit and the large cesspool, contrary to local byelaws. It was held that the conduit to the large cesspool did not constitute a sewer. It was again followed in Butt v. Snow (1903), 67 J. P. 454 ; 89 L. T. 302, and in Pakenham v. Ticehurst R. D. C., p. 31, post, where BUCKLEY, J., said : "A sewer within this Act of Parliament I conceive must be in some form a line of flow by which sewage or water of some kind, such as would be conveyed through a sewer, should be taken from a point to a point and then discharged. It must have a terminus a quo and a terminus ad quem." Cf. also Croft v. Rickmansworth Highway Board, and cases cited therewith, on p. 24, ante. In Waltham Holy Cross U. D. C. v. Lea Conservancy Board (1910), 74 J. P. 253; 103 L. T. 192, where it was held that the local authority were not responsible for the pollution of a stream by the overflow from private sewage works, it was nevertheless held that the line of pipes leading from such works was a sewer; and this decision was followed in Titterton v. Kingsbury Collieries, Ltd. (1911), 75 J. P. 295; 104 L. T. 569. But see Rochford R. D. C. v. Port of London Authority, on p. 69, post.

Note to
Section 4.

A cesspool may, by the construction of a sewer leading out of it, become a mere catchpit "catchpit," and so part of the whole sewer. See Pakenham v. Ticehurst R. D. C., supra. may be part of a sewer;

It has been held that a manhole forming a side entrance to a sewer formed part of the sewer, as being necessary to a sewer properly made, and was not a work auxiliary to the use of the sewer (Swanston v. Twickenham L. B. (1879), 11 Ch. D. 838). But it has been held that an engine-house with pump and machinery, but not a erected partly above and partly below the ground, for forcing sewage along a rising main to a common outfall for treatment was not a sewer within the meaning of s. 16, post, p. 55, but a work for the purpose of "receiving or otherwise disposing of sewage" within s. 27 (King's College, Cambridge v. Uxbridge R. D. C., [1901] 2 Ch. 768). station.

A marsh wall or embankment keeping back the river Thames from inundating the Isle of Dogs at high water and through which sewers pass draining the island at low water, was held to be a "sewer" within the meaning of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, s. 204, which prohibits building over a sewer: per Lord CAMPBELL, C.J., "Sewer, in its common sense, may mean the whole apparatus, and in its specific sense, a drain, as part of the apparatus" (Poplar District Board of Works v. Knight (1858), 22 J. P. 401; El. B. & E. 408). Marsh wall as part of "a sewer."

It will be noticed that a pipe need not necessarily convey sewage matter in order to constitute it a sewer. It would be none the less a sewer within the Act if it conveyed only rain or surface water. The draining of rain or surface water collected from different premises by different feeders into one main drain would constitute that main drain a sewer within the meaning of the Act (per SMITH, L.J., in Ferrand v. Hallas Land and Building Co., [1893] 2 Q. B. 135, 144; 57 J. P. 692). In a later case it was held that a drain was within the definition of a drain although it only carried off rain water from the roof of a house (Holland v. Lazarus (1897), 66 L. J. Q. B. 285; 61 J. P. 262). The decision in Holland v. Lazarus, supra, was approved by the Court of Appeal in Silles v. Fulham Borough Council, [1903] 1 K. B. 829; 67 J. P. 273, where it was held that a pipe carrying away sewage and rain water from one house, and rain water only from another, and not constructed as a combined operation under the order of a local authority, was a "sewer" and not a "drain." The last-mentioned case was decided upon the definition of "sewer" in the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, but the decision is equally applicable to cases under this Act. The facts were peculiar and should be referred to, for they led CHANNELL, J., to observe upon the case (in Heaver v. Fulham Borough Council, post, p. 32, and Kershaw v. Paine (1914), 78 J. P. 149). The plaintiff was the owner of two adjoining houses (A. and B.). An underground pipe or drain carried sewage from A. into the main sewer. A gutter ran along under the eaves at the back of both houses, by which rain water falling on their roofs was carried into a pipe passing down the wall of house A. This fall pipe discharged by means of a gully into the above-mentioned underground pipe or drain. From house B. only rain water was carried by this drain. This drain was held to be a sewer. CHANNELL, J., assumed that the Court of Appeal on those facts had held the fall pipe to be a sewer, and said that the court never intended to decide that proposition; that all that the court really decided was that the decision in Holland v. Lazarus, supra, was right; and that in Holland v. Lazarus, supra, the only point argued and decided was as to whether a pipe carrying off rain water only, as distinct from sewage in the ordinary meaning of the word, was a drain in the sense that the unauthorised connection of a drain, into which flowed rain water from a fall pipe, with the drain of another house converted the latter into a sewer. Silles v. Fulham Borough Council, supra, was followed in Kershaw v. Paine, supra.

Where a railway company constructed land drains for the purpose of conveying surface water from lands adjoining the railway, and these land drains were, without the knowledge or consent of the company, used by a sanitary authority to convey sewage from certain houses within the district of such authority, it was held that the drains were sewers, although, by reason of their coming within one of the exceptions in s. 13, post, p. 45, they did not vest in the local authority (L. & N. W. Rail. Co. v. Runcorn R. D. C., [1898] 1 Ch. 561; 62 J. P. 643). A line of pipes laid down by the owner of a field adjoining a highway from a ditch bordering the highway to a disused gravel pit in the field for the purpose of supplying water to the cattle feeding in the field, was held to be a sewer, although by reason of its being made for profit within the meaning of s. 13, post, p. 45, it did not vest in the district council (Croysdale v. Sunbury-on-Thames U. D. C., [1898] 2 Ch. 515; 62 J. P. 520).

A drain was made by the owner of a quarry for the purpose of collecting and carrying off surface water coming on to his land, and preventing it from running over the quarry. By means of the drain the quarry could be more economically and conveniently worked than if the water were allowed to spread over it. It was held that the drain was a sewer, although, being one made for profit within the meaning of s. 13, it did not vest in the district council. It was argued that, if such a drain were a sewer within the meaning of the Act, it would follow that every drain made for agricultural purposes for the drainage of land would also come within the Act, and would vest in and be repairable by the council. But the court said that mere agricultural drains were excluded from the Act as being made "for profit" (Sykes v. Sowerby U. D. C., [1900] 1 Q. B. 584; 64 J. P. 340). See also as to such drains, Phillimore v. Watford R. D. C., on p. 47, post.

drains and

Several houses and a slaughter-house belonging to B. drained into a road drain which ran into a ditch in B.'s field and there caused a nuisance which the local board called upon B. to abate. It was apparently admitted that the road drain was a sewer, and B. contended that the field ditch was a sewer and vested in the board who must cleanse it. The justices refused to make an order, as B. was not the person by whose act or default the nuisance arose, and it was held that they were right (Kirkheaton L. B. v. Beaumont (1888), 62 J. P. 68). Pipes laid for conveying surface water from roads into a natural stream were held to be sewers in Durrant v. Branksome U. D. C., [1897] 2 Ch. 291). A drain constructed by the side of a highway to receive the surface water of the highway, which emptied into an open ditch, was held to be a sewer within the meaning of the definition, though it was not a sewer for all purposes so as to entitle the owners of houses adjoining the highway to connect their drains with it (Kinson Pottery Co., Limited v. Poole Corporation, [1899] 2 Q. B. 41; 63 J. P. 580). As to the latter point, see notes to s. 21, post, p. 77. A channel or gutter at the side of a road which drained the surface water from the roadway, and into which rain-water pipes from the roofs and curtilages of adjoining houses drained, was held to be a "sewer" (Wilkinson v. Llandaff and Dinas Powis R. D. C., [1903] 2 Ch. 695; 68 J. P. 1). In Williamson v. Durham R. D. C., [1906] 2 K. B. 65; 70 J. P. 352, it was held that a pipe (originally put in to take surface water from a road), which in 1894 was vested in or under the control of a highway board, and was consequently not then a sewer within the meaning of s. 4, did not upon the passing of the L. G. A., 1894, become a sewer by reason of its becoming vested under s. 25 of that Act in a district council. The report of the case in the L. R. appears to be somewhat imperfect, but on a reference to the report in the Justice of the Peace, it will be seen that the pipe had for many years received sewage and surface water from various premises. The decision in the last-mentioned case was followed by another Divisional Court, and attention was called by PHILLIMORE, J., to the fact that in Wilkinson v. Llandaff and Dinas Powis R. D. C., supra, the point on which the decision in Williamson v. Durham, supra, was decided was not called to the attention of the court (Irving v. Carlisle R. D. C. (1907), 71 J. P. 212). In Wincanton R. D. C. v. Parsons, [1905] 2 K. B. 34; 69 J. P. 242, it was held that a pipe which had been laid down alongside a highway by an adjoining owner for the purpose of carrying away from his premises surface water from the highway, and into which pipe the defendant had for some years discharged the sewage from his house, but which had not been repaired by the plaintiffs or treated by them as a sewer, was not a sewer, although it also took surface water from the highway. See further as to this case, p. 51, post, and Fordom v. Parsons and Molloy v. Gray, there cited.

Note to

By the L. G. A., 1888, s. 11 (6), all drains "belonging to" a main road not retained by an urban authority vest in the county council. In 1875 a drain was under the control of a highway board, and did not vest under this Act in the then local authority; in 1888, as a drain belonging to a main road, it became vested in the county council. It was held that it had not become divested and vested in the rural council by the fact of a house drain being connected to it without the knowledge of either council (Rickarby v. New Forest R. D. C. (1910), 74 J. P. 441). Cf. O'Neill v. Waldron (1905), 39 Ir. L. T. 252.

The plaintiffs had a sewer into which no sewage from an adjoining district might be turned without licence. Builders in the defendants' adjoining district drained houses into a sewer, and led such sewer with the defendants' approval into a road drain under the control of the county road authority. This drain discharged into the plaintiffs' sewer. It was held that the defendants were responsible for the sewage thus indirectly delivered into the plaintiffs' sewer and an injunction was granted against them (Rathmines and Rathgar Improvement Commissioners v. South Dublin Guardians, [1899] 1 I. R. 157).

In Bateman v. Poplar District Board (No. 2) (1887), 37 Ch. D. 272, NORTH, J., expressed a doubt whether the unlawful act of a stranger, done without the consent of the owner of a drain, could affect the ownership of the drain or the liability of the local authority by vesting it in them, and thus throwing the responsibility for it upon them. Again, in Meador v. West Cowes L. B., post, it was said that a line of pipes, in order to become a sewer, must have been lawfully laid, and in Hedley v. Webb, [1901] 2 Ch. 126; 65 J. P. 425, COZENS-HARDY, J., expressed an opinion that a man carrying a sewer through a neighbour's land wrongfully, and without his consent, cannot make it a sewer so as to vest in the local authority. In Pakenham v. Ticehurst R. D. C. (1903), 67 J. P. 448; 2 L. G. R. 19, BUCKLEY, J., after referring to Hedley v. Webb as having decided that if by way of trespass a sewer has been laid down on any land without the knowledge of the landowner, it is competent for the landowner, when he finds out, to say: "This was wrongful against me, this is not a sewer at all, because it was put on my land by way of trespass against me, and it must be taken away," proceeded to say: "I conceive that he can say that, both as against the person who laid it and against the local authority. . . . But if, in point of fact, a system of pipes has been laid by one man in the land of another so as to constitute a sewer with the consent of the latter, or if it had been laid without consent, and subsequently he finds out it has been done, and says, 'I do consent; I do not complain of the trespass. I am quite content,' then it seems to me that a sewer will have been constituted, and as such the same will vest in the local authority." Cases decided under the metropolitan provisions as to "combined drains" (see p. 33, post) appear to show that as against the local authority, except where the owner concerned is, or derives title without purchase for value from, the person who originally made the connection, it is not material how a second house may have had its drainage connected with an existing drain, and that so long as the connection lasts, the drain which is common to the two houses is a sewer, whether the connection was made wrongly or surreptitiously or without the knowledge of the local authority. A builder built four houses which he, contrary to the directions of the sanitary authority, caused to be drained into one drain. He subsequently sold the houses to different purchasers. In a proceeding to compel the purchaser of the premises in which the drain, which so received the drainage of the four houses, was situate to repair such drain for the purpose of remedying a nuisance caused by its defective condition, it was held that the purchaser was not estopped by the wrongful act of his predecessor in title from alleging that the drain in question was a sewer, and that the duty of repairing it consequently lay, not on him, but on the sanitary authority (Kershaw v. Taylor, [1895] 2 Q. B. 471;

"sewer."

59 J. P. 726). In the same way, where the connection of more than one house with a drain was made without the consent of the sanitary authority or of the owner of the house to which the drain belonged, it was held that the common drain was a sewer (Florence v. Paddington Vestry (1895), 12 T. L. R. 30; and see Klett v. St. Giles, Camberwell (Vestry of) (1896), 60 J. P. 411). In another case, a drain for the drainage of four houses was constructed under the order of a metropolitan vestry, and became, under the definition of a drain contained in the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, a drain as distinguished from a sewer. A pipe which carried rain water from the roof of a fifth house was, without the sanction of the vestry, connected with this drain. It was held that the rain water pipe was a drain, and that its unauthorised connection with the drain belonging to the four houses, converted the latter, from the point of junction onwards, into a sewer (Holland v. Lazarus (1897), 66 L. J. Q. B. 285; 61 J. P. 262). In another case, the owner of a block of houses in the metropolis had laid down a pipe to carry off the drainage from them, and connected the pipe with a sewer belonging to the vestry in a neighbouring street. There was no evidence of any notice having been given to the vestry, or of any order having been made by them, or of their sanction or of the approval of the Metropolitan Board of Works having been obtained. It was held that, although all these requirements were necessary in order to render the original construction of the drain lawful, yet the drain was, in fact, a sewer vested in and repairable by the vestry (St. Matthew, Bethnal Green (Vestry of) v. London School Board, [1898] A. C. 190; 62 J. P. 532). These cases were followed in Geen v. St. Mary, Newington (Vestry of), [1898] 2 Q. B. 1; 62 J. P. 564. With the cases above referred to, may be compared two others. In one an order of a metropolitan vestry had been obtained for draining a group of eleven houses by a combined operation, so that under the Metropolis Management Acts, the drain common to all the houses was a drain as defined by these Acts, and not a sewer. It was subsequently discovered that there had been a deviation in the course of the drain from the plan signed by the surveyor, but there was no evidence that any houses other than those on the plan were drained by the combined operation. It was held that a mere deviation in the course of the drain was not sufficient to convert it into a sewer, and that the vestry was not, therefore, liable for its repair (Greater London Property Co., Ltd. v. Foot, [1899] 1 Q. B. 972; 63 J. P. 420). Cf. Harvey v. Busby (1906), 70 J. P. 301; Harvey v. Jaye (1907), 71 J. P. 473. In the other case a metropolitan vestry had approved a plan for the drainage of a number of houses which did not show details as to the particular drainage of each house, but authorised the drainage of the houses in pairs by a series of combined operations. In a pair of such houses the drainage was carried off by two pipes, laid one under each house; these pipes joined into one pipe before they reached the sewer. The pipe under house A. took the whole of the drainage of A., together with that from a sink in the back part of house B. The connection between the sink in B. and the pipe under A. had been made at the time when the houses and drains were constructed. The trustees of a settlement were owners of both houses; they derived their title, without any purchase for value, from the original owner, by whom the houses and drains were constructed. The court inferred as a fact that the connection of the sink was made by the authority of the surveyor to the vestry, but held that even if it had been made without authority, the plaintiffs, not being purchasers for value, could get no higher rights than the original owner had as against the public, and that they were estopped from saying that the structure was a sewer (Heaver v. Fulham Borough Council, [1904] 2 K. B. 383; 68 J. P. 278). In Wilson's Music, etc. Co. v. Finsbury Borough Council, [1908] 1 K. B. 563; 72 J. P. 37, CHANNELL, J., held that an unauthorised connection cannot make a "drain" a "sewer" as between an individual and an authority if it was wrongfully made by him or by a person through whom he claims otherwise than as a purchaser for value without notice. Semble, in the future, this exception as to purchasers for value without notice may be abrogated (ibid.; and see Rickarby v. New Forest R. D. Co., ante, p. 31). See also Kershaw v. Smith & Co., Ltd., p. 33, post, as to the right of an authority, on learning that a drain sanctioned as a "combined drain" has been improperly laid, to cause it to be altered so as to conform to the plans and sanction.

A pipe carrying the sewage of two houses into the main sewer was a sewer within the meaning of a similar definition. Subsequently, the owner of one of the houses disconnected his sewage, so that the pipe was thereafter used for the drainage of one building only. It was held that the pipe did not, upon such disconnection taking place, become a drain repairable by the owner of the house still served by it, but remained a sewer vested in and repairable by the vestry (St. Leonard, Shoreditch (Vestry of) v. Phelan, [1896] 1 Q. B. 533; 60 J. P. 244). On a defective line of pipes alongside the boundary wall of premises being examined it was found that at the end of such line there was a hole in the wall, and on the adjoining premises a short drain leading from a buried gully to such hole. The gully, and the court in which it was, had long ago been covered by a mass of concrete. The pipes had been laid more than forty years ago, when the premises had a common owner, and were said to have been disconnected almost at once. A magistrate found that the defective line of pipes had never drained any substantial part of the adjoining premises, and was not a sewer. The court upheld this finding, and the L. C. J. is reported to have said that even if in the remote past the pipes had taken some drainage from the adjoining premises the time which had elapsed would have been sufficient to destroy their legal status as a sewer (Probyn & Co., Ltd. v. Islington Borough Council, Local Gov. Jo., Nov. 27th, 1909). In Kershaw v. Smith & Co., Ltd. (1913), 77 J. P. 297, a line of pipes authorised to be laid as a combined drain was wrongfully laid so as to be a "sewer"; twenty-eight years later the authority, learning what had been done, caused the line of pipes to be altered so as to conform to the original plan and sanction. It was held to be no longer a "sewer."

Note to Section 4.

Whether "once a sewer always a sewer": effect of disconnection.

As to the effect of an agreement by an owner to treat what would otherwise become a sewer as a private drain, reference may be made to Butt v. Snow, ante, p. 28.

Agreement to treat "sewer" as a private drain.

The P. H. A., 1890, s. 19, post, p. 831, provides that, where two or more houses belonging to different owners are connected with a public sewer by a single private drain, the district council may cause a nuisance in such private drain to be abated at the cost of the owners of such houses, the expression "drain" for the purposes of the section including a drain made for the drainage of more than one building. But it is to be observed that the section does not affect the definition of a sewer except for the limited purposes for which it is applicable. For all other purposes the private drain remains a sewer within the meaning of this Act. See per WRIGHT, J., in R. v. Hastings (Mayor, etc. of), [1897] 1 Q. B. 46; 60 J. P. 759; and per WARRINGTON, J., in Pemsel and Wilson v. Tucker, [1907] 2 Ch. 191; 71 J. P. 547. See also the section itself and the cases decided upon it, post, p. 831.

"Single private drain" under P. H. A., 1890, s. 19.

The definitions of "drain" and "sewer" in the Metropolitan Management Act, 1855, s. 250, are the same as those in the text, with this qualification, that the word "drain" in the metropolis also includes a drain for draining any group or block of houses by a "combined operation" under the order of any vestry or district board. Numerous decisions have been given with reference to this part of the definition. See Bateman v. Poplar District Board of Works (1886), 33 Ch. D. 360; Appleyard v. Lambeth (Vestry of) (1896), 66 L. J. Q. B. 347; 61 J. P. 276; Geen v. Newington Vestry, supra; Bullock v. Reeve (1900), 70 L. J. K. B. 42; 65 J. P. 164; Stokes v. Haydon (1901), 65 J. "Drain," "sewer" and "combined drain" in metropolis.

"Slaughter-house" includes the buildings and places commonly called "Slaughter-houses" and knackers yards, and any building or place house.

Section 4. used for slaughtering cattle horses or animals of any description for sale :

A local Act, which closely followed the language of the Markets and Fairs Clauses Act, 1847, s. 19, enacted that "no person shall slaughter any cattle or dress any carcase for sale as human food or food of man in any place within the limits other than a slaughter-house." It was held that to slaughter cattle on the private premises of an inhabitant, unless for sale as human food, was no offence (Elias v. Nightingale (1858), 22 J. P. 131 ; 8 El. & Bl. 698).

In a Scotch case (Renfrew C. C. v. Anderson (1899), 1 F. (Just. Cas.) 48), it was held that a person did not "use premises as a slaughter-house" merely because he killed two pigs in the garden behind the house of their owner.

"Water company."

"Water company" means any persons or body of persons corporate or unincorporate supplying or who may hereafter supply water for his or their own profit :

These words are substituted for the words waterworks company in the previous Acts. The undertaking of a waterworks company was transferred by statute to a borough. The profits of the waterworks were under a subsequent statute to be transferred to the borough improvement fund, or, at the option of the corporation, to be applied in reducing the price of water to consumers. It was held that the corporation were supplying water for "their own profit" within the meaning of the above definition (Wolverhampton (Corporation of) v. Bilston (Commissioners of), [1891] 1 Ch. 315). The point was not argued on appeal (7 T. L. R. 374).

"Water-works."

"Waterworks" includes streams springs wells pumps reservoirs cisterns tanks aqueducts cuts sluices mains pipes culverts engines and all machinery lands buildings and things for supplying or used for supplying water, also the stock in trade of any water company :

Water percolating through the ground in no defined or visible channel is not a "stream" (McNab v. Robertson, [1897] A. C. 129 ; 61 J. P. 468).

As to what constitutes a "main" pipe, see Whittington Gas Co. v. Chesterfield Gas and Water Board, on p. 126, post.

"Bakehouse Regulation Act."

"Bakehouse Regulation Act" means the Bakehouse Regulation Act, 1863 [26 & 27 Vict. c. 40] :

This Act was repealed by the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878. The latter statute contained provisions which in effect took away the control of bakehouses from local authorities and vested it in the factory inspectors, but it also has now been repealed by the Factory Act, 1901, the provisions of which as to retail bakehouses are enforceable by local authorities. See that Act in App. I., and see also s. 10 and notes thereto, post, p. 42.

"Artizans and Labourers Dwellings Act."

"Artizans and Labourers Dwellings Act" means the Artizans and Labourers Dwellings Act, 1868 [31 & 32 Vict. c. 130] :

This Act, with many other subsequent statutes relating to artizans' dwellings, was repealed and re-enacted, with amendments, by the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890, post, p. 869, which itself, so far as it relates to England, has been amended by Acts of 1894, 1900, 1903, and 1909, all of which will be found, post, pp. 1070, 1082, 1085, 1157.

“Baths and Wash-houses Acts” means the Baths and Wash-houses Act, 1846 [9 & 10 Vict. c. 74], and the Baths and Wash-houses Act, 1847 [10 & 11 Vict. c. 61]:

Section 4.
“Baths and Wash-houses Acts.”

With these must now be read the Baths and Wash-houses Act, 1878, the Baths and Wash-houses Act, 1882, the Baths and Wash-houses Act, 1896 (which relates only to London), and the Baths and Wash-houses Act, 1899.

“Labouring Classes Lodging Houses Acts” means the Labouring Classes Lodging Houses Act, 1851 [14 & 15 Vict. c. 34], the Labouring Classes Dwelling Houses Act, 1866 [29 & 30 Vict. c. 28], and the Labouring Classes Dwelling Houses Act, 1867 [30 & 31 Vict. c. 28]:

“Labouring Classes Lodging Houses Acts.”

These Acts are repealed and re-enacted by the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890, post, p. 869, which itself, so far as relates to England, has been amended by Acts of 1894, 1900, 1903 and 1909, all of which will be found, post.

“Sanitary Acts” means all the above-mentioned Acts and the Acts mentioned in Part I. of Schedule V. to this Act.

“Sanitary Acts.”

Schedule V., Part I., post, p. 695 (now repealed by the S. L. R. A., 1893), contains a list of repealed enactments, and has the following note appended to it: “Of the above Acts the following (namely), ‘The Public Health Act, 1848,’ and ‘The Local Government Act, 1858,’ and ‘The Local Government Act (1858) Amendment Act, 1861,’ and ‘The Local Government Act Amendment Act, 1863,’ are in the Act referred to as ‘The Local Government Acts’”; such definition ought obviously to have been inserted in this section.

“The Local Government Acts.”

“Sanitary purposes” means any object or purposes of the Sanitary Acts:

“Sanitary purposes.”

“And of this Act,” seeing that the objects and purposes of the Sanitary Acts are the same as those of this Act.

“Court of quarter sessions” means the court of general or quarter sessions of the peace having jurisdiction over the whole or any part of the district or place in which the matter requiring the cognizance of general or quarter sessions arises:

The Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 13, provides that in every Act, whether passed before or after the commencement of that Act, the expression “Court of quarter sessions” shall mean the justices of any county, riding, parts, division, or liberty of a county, or of any county of a city, or county of a town, in general or quarter session assembled, and shall include the recorder of a municipal borough having a separate court of quarter sessions. This definition does not, however, supersede the text.

The words “or any part of the matter, as the case may be,” which were in the P. H. A., 1848, s. 82, are omitted. Hence, though the district may be situated partly in the jurisdiction of one court of quarter sessions and partly in that of another, it is assumed that the matter in question will arise in one of them only. But if the matter does not arise in one of them only, both courts of quarter sessions would have jurisdiction, and consequently either. The meaning of the definition appears to be that the jurisdiction of a court of quarter sessions over any matter arising within its local limits is not to be affected by the fact that the sanitary district in which it arises is situate in part only within such limits. But it does not give to a court of quarter sessions jurisdiction over a matter not arising within its local limits, merely because the district in which the matter arises extends into such limits.

“Court of

“Court of summary jurisdiction” means any justice or justices of the peace, stipendiary, or other magistrate or officer, by whatever name called, to whom jurisdiction is given by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, or any Acts therein referred to :

This definition and the next were repealed by the S. L. R. A. (No. 2), 1893. It is practically the same definition as that which was contained in the S. J. A., 1879, s. 50. In R. v. Price (1880), 5 Q. B. D. 300 ; 44 J. P. 248, it was held that the Summary Jurisdiction Acts regulated the procedure only in cases where justices were sitting and acting judicially as a court of summary jurisdiction, and not in cases where their duties were ministerial only. But by the S. J. A., 1884, s. 7, it was provided that s. 50 of the S. J. A., 1879, should include such justice, justices, or magistrates as therein mentioned, whether acting under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, or any of them, or under any other Act, or by virtue of his or their commission, or by the common law. And now by the Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 13, superseding the text, it is provided that in every Act, whether passed before or after the commencement of that Act, the expression “Court of Summary Jurisdiction” shall mean any justice or justices of the peace, or other magistrates by whatever name called, to whom jurisdiction is given by, or who is authorised to act under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, and whether acting under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, or any of them, or under any other Act or by virtue of his commission, or under the common law. In consequence of this definition it has been held that justices sitting to enforce payment of poor rates are now a court of summary jurisdiction and can therefore state a special case (R. v. London (Lord Mayor of) (1887), 52 J. P. 70 ; 57 L. T. 491 ; Fourth City Mutual Building Society v. East Ham (Churchwardens of), [1892] 1 Q. B. 661 ; 56 J. P. 440 ; cf. Davis v. Woodfield (1900), 64 J. P. 215 ; 81 L. T. 782) ; but the point cannot be regarded as definitely settled (Boulter v. Kent JJ., [1897] A. C. 556 ; 61 J. P. 532 ; R. v. West Riding JJ. (1898), 14 T. L. R. 199 ; R. v. Lindsey JJ., [1912] 2 K. B. 413). See also Hagmaier v. Willesden Overseers, [1904] 2 K. B. 316 ; 68 J. P. 343 ; Huish v. Liverpool JJ., [1914] 1 K. B. 109 ; 78 J. P. 45.

Jurisdiction
Acts.”

“Summary Jurisdiction Acts” means the Act of the session of the eleventh and twelfth years of the reign of her present Majesty, chapter forty-three, intituled “An Act to facilitate the performance of the duties of justices of the peace out of sessions within England and Wales with respect to summary convictions and orders,” and any Act amending the same.

The Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 13, superseding the text, provides that in every Act, whether passed before or after the commencement of that Act, the expression “Summary Jurisdiction Acts” shall mean the S. J. A., 1848, and the S. J. A., 1879, and any Act, past or future, amending those Acts or either of them. The amending Acts are the S. J. (Process) A., 1881 ; the S. J. A., 1884 ; and the S. J. A., 1899.

CONSTITUTION OF DISTRICTS AND AUTHORITIES.

5. For the purposes of this Act England, except the metropolis (a), shall (b) consist of districts to be called respectively—

Urban and rural sanitary districts.

(1) Urban sanitary districts, and

(2) Rural sanitary districts,

(in this Act referred to as urban and rural districts); and such urban and rural districts shall respectively be subject to the jurisdiction of local authorities, called urban sanitary authorities and rural sanitary authorities (in this Act referred to as urban and rural authorities), invested with the powers in this Act mentioned.

This and the following sections must now be read subject to the provisions of the L. G. A., 1894, post, p. 975, which has effected important changes in the styles and constitution of sanitary districts.

"The scheme of the Public Health Act, by s. 5, appears to have been to divide all England into certain districts, in each of which there was to be an authority, either rural or urban; and each of such districts was to be subject thenceforth to the jurisdiction of the local authority established by such Act, which was to be invested with the powers in the Act mentioned" (per WILLS, J., in Lea v. Facey (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 139, 142; 50 J. P. 295).

(a) See the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 4.

(b) Although this word imports futurity, that is not the effect of the section, for these districts existed at the date of the Act, and all such districts as then constituted were continued by s. 326, post, p. 652.

6. Urban districts shall consist of the places in that behalf mentioned in the first column of the table in this section contained, and urban authorities shall be the several bodies specified in the second column of the said table in relation to the said places respectively.

Description of urban districts and urban authorities.

Urban District.	Urban Authority.
Borough (a) constituted such either before or after the passing of this Act.	The Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses acting by the Council (b).
Improvement Act district (c) constituted such before the passing of this Act (d) and having no part of its area situated within a borough or local government district.	The Improvement Commissioners.
Local Government district (e) constituted such either before or after the passing of this Act (f), having no part of its area situated within a borough, and not coincident in area with a borough or Improvement Act district (g).	The Local Board.

Provided that (h)—

(1) Any borough, the whole of which is included in and forms part of a local government district or Improvement Act district,

Section 6.

- and any Improvement Act district which is included in and forms part of a local government district, and any local government district which is included in and forms part of an Improvement Act district, shall for the purposes of this Act be deemed to be absorbed in the larger district in which it is included, or of which it forms part; and the improvement commissioners or local board, as the case may be, of such larger district, shall be the urban authority therein; and
- (2) Where an Improvement Act district is coincident in area with a local government district, the improvement commissioners, and not a local board, shall be the urban authority therein (i); and
- (3) Where any part of an Improvement Act district is situated within a borough or local government district, or where any part of a local government district is situated within a borough, the remaining part (k) of such Improvement Act district or of such local government district so partly situated within a borough shall for the purposes of this Act continue subject to the like jurisdiction as it would have been subject to if this Act had not been passed, unless and until the Local Government Board by provisional order otherwise directs (l).

For the purposes of this Act, the boroughs of Oxford, Cambridge, Blandford, Calne, Wenlock, Folkestone, and Newport Isle of Wight, shall not be deemed to be boroughs, and the borough of Cambridge shall be deemed to be an Improvement Act district, and the borough of Oxford to be included in the local government district of Oxford. So much of the borough of Folkestone as is not included within the local government district of Sandgate shall be an urban district, and shall be under the jurisdiction, for the purposes of this Act, of the authority for executing the Folkestone Improvement Act, 1855 (m).

(a) See the definition of "borough" in s. 4, ante, p. 4.

(b) See s. 198, and the notes to that section, post, p. 463.

(c) In s. 4, ante, p. 4, will be seen the definition of "Improvement Act district" and "improvement commissioners."

(d) These were the words used in 35 & 36 Vict. c. 79, s. 4, where of course they referred to the date of that Act. As here used they would have extended the districts to such as were formed in the interval between that Act and the passing of this Act, but in fact none such were created during that period.

(e) See in s. 4, ante, p. 4, the definition of a "local government district."

(f) See note (d) above. As to how a local government district may be constituted after the passing of this Act, see the notes to s. 271, post, p. 605, and the provisions of the L. G. A., 1888, s. 57, post, p. 769.

(g) A borough created hereafter will be an urban district.

(h) All these provisions took effect under previous Acts, but since the passing of the L. G. A., 1894, the whole of this proviso may be regarded as spent.

(i) The case of a borough which was included in 35 & 36 Vict. c. 79, s. 4, prov. 2, is here omitted.

(k) It will be noticed that this proviso does not make any reference to the part which is within the borough. That became part of the urban sanitary district. See also s. 339, post, p. 661.

(m) Since the passing of the L. G. A., 1888, provisional orders have been made under s. 52 of that Act, dealing with all of these boroughs except Folkestone and Newport, whereby the councils have now become the urban sanitary authorities: see the section and the notes thereto, post, p. 767. Oxford is now a county borough: see further as to it, s. 342, post, p. 663. By 39 & 40 Vict. c. lxi. the corporation of Newport were placed on the same footing as sanitary authorities in other boroughs. Part of the borough of Folkestone is still in the district of the Sandgate Urban District Council, but the corporation are the sanitary authority for the remainder of the borough.

Section 6.

7. Every local board (a), and any improvement commissioners being an urban authority and not otherwise incorporated, shall continue to be or be a body corporate, designated (in the case of local boards and improvement commissioners being urban sanitary authorities at the time of the passing of this Act), by such name as they then bear (b), and (in the case of local boards constituted after the passing of this Act) by such name (c) as they may with the sanction of the Local Government Board adopt; with a perpetual succession and a common seal, and with power to sue and be sued in such name and to hold lands without any licence in mortmain for the purposes of this Act (d).

The above section is still in force, although local boards and improvement commissioners are called urban district councils (see the L. G. A., 1894, s. 21 (1), post, p. 996).

(a) It must be remembered that local boards and other local authorities were incorporated by the Sanitary Act, 1866, s. 46. This clause, therefore, incorporated improvement commissioners who became urban sanitary authorities. Rural district councils are incorporated by the L. G. A., 1894, s. 24 (7), post, p. 1003.

Incorporation of local boards and improvement commissioners.

(b) Provision is contained in s. 311, post, p. 648, for the change of the name of corporation, but that provision is practically superseded by the L. G. A., 1894, the s. 55 (3). In the case of new urban district councils the order of the county council under the L. G. A., 1888, s. 57, usually provides sufficiently for the name to be borne by the council and district.

It may be right to observe that "a parliamentary corporation is a corporation for the purposes only for which it has been established by Parliament, and has no existence for any other purpose, and that whatsoever is done beyond the scope of such purpose is ultra vires and void" (per POLLOCK, C.B., in National Guarantee Manure Co. v. Donald (1859), 4 H. & N. 8, at p. 16). And see Att.-Gen. v. Hastings Corporation (1902), 67 J. P. 165; 1 L. G. R. 41; Att.-Gen. v. Manchester Corporation, [1906] 1 Ch. 643; 70 J. P. 201; Batson v. London School Board (1903), 67 J. P. 457; 20 T. L. R. 22; Att.-Gen. v. West Gloucestershire Water Co., [1909] 2 Ch. 338; 73 J. P. 453; Nicoll v. Dundee Harbour Trustees, [1914] S. C. 374. The doctrine of estoppel does not apply in the case of a corporation where its grant is in contravention of a statutory enactment (Bishop of Bangor v. Parry, [1891] 2 Q. B. 277; Davis v. Leicester Corporation, [1894] 2 Ch. 208; Canterbury Corporation v. Cooper (1908), 72 J. P. 465; 99 L. T. 612). For further information as to the law on the subject the reader is referred to the treatise on the doctrine of ultra vires by Mr. Seward Brice.

Corporations
doctrine of

(c) See note (b), supra.

(d) But for this provision a licence in mortmain would be necessary: see the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888, s. 1, and note, post, p. 1830. It must be noticed that there is no limit to the amount of lands to be held by these incorporated bodies if the land be required for the purposes of the Act. When a licence in mortmain is obtained there is usually such limit. The acquisition of lands for the purpose of the Act is provided for in s. 176, post, p. 415.

A similar provision as to rural district councils is contained in the L. G. A., 1894, s. 24 (7), post, p. 1003.

By the Bodies Corporate (Joint Tenancy) Act, 1899, post, p. 1947, corporations may now hold property as joint tenants.

land.

Section 8.
Election of local boards.

8. The members of local boards (a) shall be elective, and the number and qualification of members of local boards, the qualification of electors, the mode and expenses of election, and the proceedings incident thereto, the retirement and disqualification of members, the proceedings in case of lapse of a local board, and all other matters relating to the election of members of local boards, shall be governed by the rules contained in Schedule II. to this Act (b).

(a) The statute thus provided only for local boards, i.e., boards elected for L. G. A. districts. And see as to certain local boards, s. 339, post, p. 661.

(b) The italicised words were repealed by the L. G. A., 1894, s. 89, Sched. II. The matters therein referred to are now provided for by ss. 23 and 48 of that Act and the rules of the L. G. B. framed thereunder, which also extend to elections of urban sanitary authorities for other urban districts which are not boroughs, i.e., those which were formerly Improvement Act districts. In boroughs the urban sanitary authority being the town council is elected under the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882.

Description of rural districts and rural authorities.

9. The area of any union (a) which is not coincident in area with an urban district, nor wholly included in an urban district (in this section called a rural union), with the exception of those portions (if any) of the area which are included in any urban district (b), shall be a rural district, and the guardians of the union shall form the rural authority of such district (c): Provided (d) that—

- (1) An ex officio guardian (e) resident in any parish or part of a parish belonging to such union, which parish or part of a parish forms or is situated in an urban district, shall not act or vote in any case in which guardians of such union act or vote as members of the rural authority, unless he is the owner or occupier of property situated in the rural district of a value sufficient to qualify him as an elective guardian for the union:
- (2) An elective guardian of any parish belonging to such union, and forming or being wholly included within an urban district, shall not act or vote in any case in which guardians of such union act or vote as members of the rural authority:
- (3) Where part of a parish belonging to a rural union forms or is situated in an urban district, the Local Government Board may by order divide such parish into separate wards, and determine the number of guardians to be elected by such wards respectively, in such manner as to provide for the due representation of the part of the parish situated within the rural district; but until such order has been made, the guardian or guardians of such parish may act and vote as members of the rural authority in the same manner as if no part of such parish formed part of or was situated in an urban district.

Where the number of elective guardians who are not by this section disqualified from acting and voting as members of the rural authority (f) is less than five, the Local Government Board may from time to time by order nominate such number of persons as may be necessary to make up that number from owners or occupiers of property situated in the rural district of a value sufficient to qualify them as elective guardians for the union, and the persons so nominated shall be entitled to act and vote as members of the rural authority but not further or otherwise (g).

Subject to the provisions of this Act, all statutes, orders, and legal provisions applicable to any board of guardians shall apply to them in their capacity of rural authority under this Act for purposes of this Act ; and it is hereby declared that the rural authority are the same body as the guardians of the union or parish for or within which such authority act (h). Section 9.

(a) See definition in s. 4, ante, p. 6.

(b) See s. 6, ante, p. 37. Though the greater part of the union may be comprised in urban districts, yet if all be not, that which remains of the union, though practically only the residue, is a rural district.

(c) These words have not been repealed, but the guardians are no longer the rural authority, which consists of persons elected as rural district councillors. These are guardians for the parishes for which they are elected, and with the guardians for the urban parishes in the union constitute the board of guardians, which is now a body quite distinct from the rural district council : see the L. G. A., 1894, s. 24, post, p. 1000. Guardians and rural district councillors.

(d) These provisions were repealed by the L. G. A., 1894, s. 89, Sched. II., post, p. 1068.

(e) By the L. G. A., 1894, there are now no ex officio guardians. As to such guardians formerly, see 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 38, amended by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 24.

(f) The words in italics were repealed by the S. L. R. A., 1898.

(g) The italicised words in this clause were repealed by the L. G. A., 1894, s. 89, Sched. II., post, p. 1068.

The provisions of this clause will apply in some cases where by virtue of the L. G. A., 1894, a rural district formerly situate in two counties becomes divided into two districts, and one or both of these have less than five elected councillors : see s. 24 (5) of that Act, post, p. 1002. The L. G. B. periodically nominate the required number of persons to serve upon certain rural district councils, and make a practice of selecting persons who are qualified for election as councillors.

(h) This clause was repealed by the L. G. A., 1894, s. 89, Sched. II., post, p. 1068.

10. In addition to the powers, rights, duties, capacities, liabilities and obligations exercisable by or attaching to an urban authority under this Act, every urban authority shall within their district (to the exclusion of any other authority (a) which may have previously exercised or been subject to the same) have exercise and be subject to all the powers rights duties capacities liabilities and obligations within such district exercisable or attaching by and to the local authority under the Bakehouse Regulation Act (b), and the Artizans and Labourers Dwellings Act (c), or any Acts amending the same. Powers and duties of urban authorities.

Where the Baths and Wash-houses Acts (d) and the Labouring Classes Lodging Houses Acts (e), or any of them, are in force within the district of any urban authority, such authority shall have all powers rights duties capacities liabilities and obligations in relation to such Acts exercisable by or attaching to the council incorporated commissioners local board improvement commissioners and other commissioners or persons acting in the execution of the said Acts or any of them.

Where the Baths and Wash-houses Acts are not in force within the district of any urban authority, such authority may adopt such Acts ; and where the Labouring Classes Lodging Houses Acts are not in force within the district of any urban authority, such authority may adopt such Acts (c).

Section 10. Where any local Act other than an Act for the conservancy of any river (e) is in force within the district of an urban authority, conferring on any commissioners trustees or other persons powers for purposes the same as or similar to those of this Act (but not for their own pecuniary benefit), all the powers rights duties capacities liabilities and obligations of such commissioners trustees or other persons in relation to such purposes shall be transferred and attach to the said urban authority (f).

(a) This section is in terms less extensive than the P. H. A., 1872, s. 7, and only refers to the particular Acts mentioned. The statute in its different parts enables the urban authority to execute the powers thereby confided to them. But the Act of 1872 vested all the powers and liabilities of the sanitary Acts in the urban sanitary authorities, and s. 326 of this Act gives, in substitution for such powers and liabilities now repealed, the powers and liabilities specified in this Act. The last paragraph of this section provides for powers contained in local Acts.

bakehouses.

(b) As already stated in the note to s. 4, ante, p. 34, this Act was repealed by the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, s. 107. But by the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, s. 102, as respects every retail bakehouse, the provisions of Part V., ss. 97—101, of that Act, shall be enforced by the district council of the district in which the retail bakehouse is situate, and not by an inspector; and for the purposes of the section the medical officer of health is to have the same powers of entry, inspection, taking legal proceedings, and otherwise, as an inspector. By the same section, a retail bakehouse is defined to mean any bakehouse or place not being a factory, the bread, biscuits, or confectionery baked in which are sold, not wholesale, but by retail in some shop or place occupied with such bakehouse. But bakehouses which are not retail as defined by the Act are not under the control of local authorities. These remain under the control of the factory inspectors.

Section 5 of the Act of 1901 provides however, that where it appears to an inspector under that Act that any act, neglect, or default in relation to any drain, water-closet, earth-closet, privy, ashpit, water-supply, nuisance, or other matter in a factory or workshop, is punishable or remediable under the law relating to public health, but not under that Act, he is to give notice thereof to the district council of the district, and the district council are to make inquiry, and take action if they think proper, and to inform the inspector of the proceedings taken. Section 38, post, p. 100, s. 22 of the P. H. A., 1890, and s. 9 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, contain provisions which enable the local authority to compel owners or occupiers of factories and workshops to provide proper privy accommodation. The provisions of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, the effect of which has been here stated, so far as they are material for the present purpose, will be found in App. I., p. 1988, post.

Working class lodging-houses: the
Acts.

(c) These Acts are now repealed and replaced by the Housing of the Working Classes Acts, 1890, 1894, 1900, 1903 and 1909, post, the administration of which for the most part falls to the sanitary authorities. The provisions of these Acts as to working class lodging-houses are now in force universally.

Baths and washhouses.

(d) These Acts (9 & 10 Vict. c. 74; 10 & 11 Vict. c. 61; 41 & 42 Vict. c. 14; 45 & 46 Vict. c. 30; 62 & 63 Vict. c. 29) so far as material are set out in App. I., post. 59 & 60 Vict. c. 59, relates only to London.

(e) There is no definition of these words, but they are explained in s. 327 (3), and they occur again in s. 303.

Lighting and

(f) See s. 322, post, p. 651, as to a particular case. It may be well to refer to 20 & 21 Vict. c. 50, s. 2, though it was almost wholly superseded by 35 & 36 Vict. c. 79, s. 7, as interpreted by 37 & 38 Vict. c. 89, s. 3, and now by the above section. It enables trustees under any Act for lighting, paving, etc. any borough to transfer their powers to the borough corporation, and by the interpretation clause "trustees" means "trustees so charged with the execution of a public trust or duty." It was held, however, that a local board were not trustees within the meaning of this definition, and could not transfer their powers to a borough corporation; and that, as the district of the local board and the corporation were not identical (that of the former being more extensive), 21 & 22 Vict. c. 98, s. 26, did not justify such a transfer (Swinford v. Keble (1866), L. R. 1 Q. B. 549; 30 J. P. 533).

Note to
Section 10.

The effect of the provision in the text was to reconstitute improvement commissioners as new bodies under this Act, vesting in them as such new bodies the powers given by the local Acts as well as those given by this Act, and such commissioners in subsequently doing any act in the exercise of the powers originally conferred by their local Acts are acting under this Act, and consequently are entitled in respect of such act to any protection or privilege given by this Act to members of local authorities acting under its provisions (Lea v. Facey (1887), 19 Q. B. D. 352; 52 J. P. 756; cf. Douglass v. Rhyl U. D. C., [1913] 2 Ch. 407; 77 J. P. 373).

The case of an improvement district becoming a borough is provided for by s. 310, post, p. 647.

11. In addition to the powers rights duties capacities liabilities and obligations exercisable by or attaching to a rural authority under this Act, every rural authority shall, within their district (to the exclusion of any other authority which may have previously exercised or been subject to the same) have exercise and be subject to all the powers rights duties capacities liabilities and obligations within such district exercisable by or attaching to the local authority under the Bakehouse Regulation Act, or any Acts amending the same.

duties of
authorities.

Upon the passing of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, this section was practically repealed, for the Bakehouse Regulation Act was repealed by that Act. It has been pointed out, however, in note (b) to s. 10, ante, p. 42, that the control of local authorities over bakehouses has been partially restored. See the note, and see also the provisions of the Factory Acts in App. I., post.

The powers directly conferred upon rural authorities by this Act may be, and in many cases are, largely supplemented by orders of the L. G. B. under s. 276, declaring specified provisions of the Act which relate to urban districts to be in force in a rural district or part thereof. Similar orders are also issued under s. 5 of the P. H. A., 1890, and s. 4 of the Private Street Works Act, 1892.

12. From (a) and after the passing of this Act all such property real and personal, including all interests rights and easements in to and out of property real and personal (including things in action), as belongs to or is vested in, or would but for this Act have belonged to or been vested in the council of any borough, or any improvement commissioners or local board as the urban sanitary authority of any district under the Sanitary Acts, or any board of guardians as the rural sanitary authority of any district under those Acts, shall continue vested or vest in such council, improvement commissioners, or local board, or board of guardians as the local authority of their district under this Act, subject to all debts, liabilities, and obligations affecting the same property.

property in local authorities.

All debts liabilities and obligations incurred by any authority whose powers rights duties liabilities capacities and obligations are under this Act exercisable by or attached to a local authority may be enforced against the local authority to the same extent and in the same manner

Section 12. as they might have been enforced against the authority which incurred the same (b).

Object of
provision.

(a) The words in italics were repealed by the S. L. R. A. (No. 2), 1893. It must be remembered that by virtue of 35 & 36 Vict. c. 79, s. 9, the property referred to had been transferred, and such of it as still remains the property of the authorities mentioned, is therefore continued to be vested in them. But that clause only transferred to the sanitary authorities property applicable to the sanitary purposes thereby placed under the management of those authorities. Thus, if a borough included in a local Act district had been absorbed in an Improvement Act district, all the property of the town council did not pass, but only so much as related to the sanitary purposes. So, in the case of a parish which was a sewer authority, all the property of the parish did not pass, but only what belonged to the parish in connection with the sewers. "But for this enactment there would be a doubt as to whether the property which formerly belonged to the improvement commissioners continued to be theirs, or in what capacity it continued to be theirs, and the Act solves that difficulty by saying that henceforth such property shall be held by the body of commissioners as the local authority" : per WILLS, J., in Lea v. Facey (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 143; 50 J. P. 295; and see the observations of the C. A. in the same case (1887), 19 Q. B. D. 352; 52 J. P. 756. Cf. Douglass v. Rhyl U. D. C., ante, p. 43.

Enforcement of liabilities,
etc. of predecessors.

(b) The urban or rural authority have the same legal answers to claims that the former authority had, and such others as would be open to them in claims of a like character against themselves, such as the Statute of Limitations.

With regard to the liability of a local board in respect of a decree made against their predecessors, reference may be made to Att.-Gen. v. Corporation of Birmingham (1880), 15 Ch. D. 423. In that case a perpetual injunction was decreed in 1875 against the corporation as the sanitary authority of B., restraining them from allowing sewage to flow into a river, the injunction being suspended for five years to give the borough an opportunity to execute certain works. At the expiration of that period the plaintiffs desired to enforce the injunction, but in the meantime the B. T. and R. District Drainage Board had succeeded to the rights and liabilities of the corporation in respect of the sewage. It was held that the new board could not then be made parties to the original action. Thereupon an action was commenced against the new board, the plaintiffs claiming a declaration that they were entitled to the same benefit of the decree against the defendants, as if they had been defendants in the former suit. It was held that the new board were not made by this Act subject to any liabilities of their predecessors except those attaching under the Act, and were therefore not bound by a decree against them, and that, there being no allegation of any nuisance committed by the new board, the plaintiffs had no cause of action (Att.-Gen. v. Birmingham, Tame, and Rea District Drainage Board (1881), 17 Ch. D. 685; 46 J. P. 36).

But where a serious nuisance had admittedly been caused by a rural authority's mode of dealing with sewage, it was held that the dissolution of that authority and the constitution, by order of the L. G. B., of an urban sanitary authority over the district, with the rights, powers, duties, etc., of the old authority, did not absolve the new authority from liability to an injunction for continuing the nuisance without taking any effectual steps to remedy it. Eleven months having elapsed since the constitution of the new authority, the operation of the injunction was suspended for two months only (Taylor v. Friern Barnet L. B., W. N. (1885), p. 7).

PART III.

SANITARY PROVISIONS.

SEWERAGE AND DRAINAGE.

Regulations as to Sewers and Drains (a).

13. All existing and future sewers within the district of a local authority, together with all buildings, works, materials and things belonging thereto (b),

Sewers
vested in local authority.

Except—

- (1) Sewers made by any person (c) for his own profit (d), or by any company for the profit (d) of the shareholders (e); and
- (2) Sewers made and used for the purpose of draining, preserving, or improving land under any local or private Act of Parliament, or for the purpose of irrigating land (f); and
- (3) Sewers under the authority of any commissioners of sewers appointed by the Crown (g), shall vest in (h) and be under the control of such local authority.

Provided that sewers within the district of a local authority which have been or which may hereafter be constructed by or transferred to some other local authority or by or to a sewage board or other authority empowered under any Act of Parliament to construct sewers shall (subject to any agreement to the contrary) vest in and be under the control of the authority who constructed the same, or to whom the same have been transferred (i).

(b) As to these words, see note (a) to s. 14, p. 49, post, and note (e) to s. 16, p. 57, post.

(c) This word, according to the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 6, includes a corporation aggregate. It appears also to apply to a corporation sole.

(d) A sewer made by the owner of some of the houses in a street not yet a highway, though made for the purpose of draining his own amongst other houses, "for profit"—is not a sewer made for his own "profit" within the meaning of this section (Acton L. B. v. Batten (1884), 28 Ch. D. 283; 49 J. P. 357). This decision was followed in Pinnock v. Waterworth (1887), 51 J. P. 248; 3 T. L. R. 563, MATHEW, J., saying: "The builder had constructed a number of houses. He made a drain and a cesspool and connected them with the first house, and as he completed successive houses he continued the drain from one house to the other, carrying the cesspool forward, and, finally, when all the houses had been completed, there was a line of pipes connecting them with the cesspool. In time that cesspool became a nuisance. Now, was the line of pipes and the cesspool something made for the purpose of profit within the meaning of s. 13? It could not be said to be so. If such pipes were to be excepted from the Act the operation of the Act would be narrowed down to the smallest possible point." In another case a piece of land was laid out for building; a street was laid out and a sewer made which drained the houses. A local board was afterwards formed. The sewer was sufficient as long as sewage could be discharged into the Thames; but, when this was prohibited, it became necessary to construct a new sewer to carry the sewage in a different direction. The local board having made a new sewer sought to charge the frontagers under s. 150. It was held that the original sewer was not made by any person for his own profit, and, therefore, vested in the local board, who were bound to keep it in repair, and make any necessary alteration at the public expense

Section 13.

(Bonella v. Twickenham L. B. (1887), 18 Q. B. D. 577 ; 51 J. P. 580). HUDDLESTON, B., said : " No doubt the sewer was made for the use of the owners of the houses, but the words of the section are, 'for his own profit,' not 'for his own use.' An illustration of how the exception might apply occurs to me. It might refer to the case of a person who was utilising sewage and made a sewer to conduct the sewage to works used for that purpose, or it might apply to a company formed for the purpose of making manure who might require to conduct the sewage to a particular place in the course of their business. I think the second exception in the same section bears out this view, for it applies to sewers for the purpose of draining, preserving or improving land under local or private Acts, or for irrigating land. This provision throws light on the word 'profit,' and goes to show that it is not the same as use. If the contention is right, no sewers would ever vest in the local board." The decision was affirmed ((1887), 20 Q. B. D. 63 ; 52 J. P. 356). In Ferrand v. Hallas Land and Building Co., [1893] 2 Q. B. 135 ; 57 J. P. 692, the plaintiff was the owner of land on both sides of a stream, and the defendants were owners of land near to and higher up the stream. The defendants erected on their land a row of sixty-nine cottages, and a long intercepting sewer, with which each of the cottage drains was connected, the sewer being connected with the stream so that the drainage from the cottages passed down the drains into the sewer and so into the stream. The drains and sewer were constructed in pursuance of plans sanctioned by the local authority. It was held that the sewer was not made for the profit of the defendants, and was vested in the authority. Per LOPES, L.J. : " A sewer made for profit means, in my opinion, not a sewer made for the mere purpose of drainage, not a sewer made for the mere purpose of discharging matter not in any way to be utilised, but which it was essential to get rid of for sanitary purposes, but a sewer made for the purpose of realising a profit, above and beyond, and independent of any sanitary purpose. Such, for instance, as a sewer made to collect feculent matter with a view of utilising it for manure, or a sewer made for the purpose of carrying away surface or other water and using it for irrigation." Per A. L. SMITH, L.J. (by way of further illustration) : " It will be noticed that a sewer need not necessarily convey sewage matter in order to constitute it a sewer. It would be none the less a sewer within the Act of 1875 if it conveyed only rain or surface water. The draining off of rain or surface water, collected from different premises by different feeders into one main drain, would constitute that main drain a sewer within the meaning of the Act. In some manufacturing districts this is done, and the water so collected is passed on and distributed upon payment amongst different receivers. A sewer made for this purpose would, in my opinion, be within the exception." In Minehead L. B. v. Luttrell, [1894] 2 Ch. 178, the defendant, lord of the manor and owner of a large part of the town of M., constructed, in 1878, at his own expense, and with the sanction of the local authority (where necessary), a system of sewerage for draining the town, and he subsequently extended the system to new streets from time to time. Most of the houses in the town were connected with the system, and a voluntary sewage rate, varying in amount from year to year, was received by the defendant from the occupiers. The plaintiff authority claimed that the sewers were vested in them, but it was held that they were made by the defendant for his own profit. See also as to private sewerage systems, Titterton v. Kingsbury Collieries, Ltd., p. 69, post. In Vowles v. Colmer (1895), 64 L. J. Ch. 414, the plaintiffs laid out and developed a building estate, on one side of which there was a roadway, and, at their own expense, constructed a sewer in the roadway on their own side of its middle line. The building plots were disposed of from time to time, generally at fee farm rents ; and on entering into agreements with purchasers the plaintiffs required a payment to be made for connecting the drainage system of the premises sold with the sewer. The defendant was the owner of a house on the other side of the roadway, opposite the plaintiffs' estate, and he claimed the right to connect the drains from his house with the sewer without paying the plaintiffs therefor. The plaintiffs sought an injunction, but ROMER, J., dismissed the action on the ground that Ferrand v. Hallas Land and Building Co., supra, was not distinguishable without over-refinement. "Profit" is not to be restricted to a direct money payment. Thus, a sewer made not for ordinary drainage purposes, but to enable the land on which it is made to be occupied more profitably, or to avoid an expenditure which would otherwise have to be incurred in order that the occupation might be equally beneficial, is made for the profit of the owner within the meaning of the section, and does not vest in the authority. This was so held in the case of a line of pipes laid by the owner of a field adjoining a highway from a ditch bordering the highway to a disused gravel pit in the field for the purpose of supplying water to cattle (Croysdale v. Sunbury-on-Thames U. D. C., [1898] 2 Ch. 515; 62 J. P. 520). A drain was made by the owner of a quarry for the purpose of collecting and carrying off surface water coming on to his land and preventing it from running over the quarry. By means of the drain the quarry could be more economically and conveniently worked than if the water were allowed to spread over it. It was held that the drain was a sewer made for his own profit, and did not vest in the authority (Sykes v. Sowerby U. D. C., [1900] 1 Q. B. 584; 64 J. P. 340). This decision was followed in Phillimore v. Watford R. D. C., [1913] 2 Ch. 434; 77 J. P. 453. For an earlier decision to the contrary effect, see Russell v. Knight, cited on p. 78, post.

Note to Section 13.

(e) The word proprietors, which existed in the P. H. A., 1848, s. 43, and was somewhat indistinct in its signification, is here omitted.

(f) This purpose is not limited to irrigation under local or private Acts.

A natural stream, fed by natural and artificial drainage of land, belonging Land to individuals, was cleared out and partially widened and deepened by com- drainage missioners acting under a private Inclosure Act, which gave them power to do sewers under so at the expense of the proprietors. In its passage to a river it passed through a special Acts. town and received the drainage of a few houses. It was held that, assuming it to be a sewer, which was very doubtful, it came within this exception, and did not vest in the local board (R. v. Godmanchester L. B. (1866), L. R. 1 Q. B. 328; 30 J. P. 164).

A railway company, whose special Act incorporated the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, constructed land drains for the purpose of conveying surface water from lands adjoining the railway, and these drains were, without the knowledge of the company, used by a rural sanitary authority to convey sewage from certain houses within their district. It was held that the drains were sewers, but that they were within this exception, and did not vest in the authority (L. & N. W. Rail. Co. v. Runcorn R. D. C., [1898] 1 Ch. 561; 62 J. P. 643). A railway company will, therefore, be responsible for cleansing such sewers, so as to abate any nuisance arising in them.

Drainage boards under the Land Drainage Act, 1861, are constituted by Provisional Order; and such an Order when confirmed by Parliament is to be "deemed to be a public general Act of Parliament" (s. 64 (6)). Whether it is nevertheless "local" within this provision, has never apparently been discussed; but reference may be made to R. v. London C. C., [1893] 2 Q. B. 454; 58 J. P. 21.

(g) See further the saving contained in s. 327, post, p. 653.

(h) The case of Bateman v. Poplar District Board of Works (1886), 33 Ch. D. 360, "Combined" and other cases cited on p. 33, ante, were decided with reference to provisions in and "single the Metropolis Management Acts, which have no exact parallel in the P. H. A., private" 1875. See, however, the provisions of the P. H. A., 1890, s. 19, post, p. 831. drains. Cases relating to the question whether a wrongful or surreptitious connection of one drain with another prevents the latter vesting in the local authority as a sewer have already been noticed in the note under s. 4, at p. 31, ante.

A line of pipes laid in a new street as a "sewer" therefor in accordance with plans approved by the authority, vests in them upon completion, at any rate as soon as it is approved and authorised to be covered in, although no houses have been built to connect with it; and the authority may under s. 16 proceed to link it up by another new sewer to their general system (Turner v. Handsworth U. D. C., [1909] 1 Ch. 381; 73 J. P. 95; and see p. 28, ante). Vesting and divesting of sewers.

The question whether the provision in the text as to vesting has been rendered inoperative as to a "single private drain" by virtue of the P. H. A., 1890, s. 19, was considered by WARRINGTON, J., who held that the last-mentioned section does not divest from an authority that which under the P. H. A., 1875, is a sewer. See Pensel and Wilson v. Tucker, [1907] 2 Ch. 191; 71 J. P. 547.

Note to

It appears, also, that, as a general rule, when once a sewer has vested, it does not become divested (at any rate, so long as it is used for carrying sewage), because all houses but one are disconnected from it: see St. Leonard, Shoreditch (Vestry of) v. Phelan, ante, p. 33, but see Probyn & Co., Ltd. v. Islington Borough Council, and Kershaw v. Smith & Co., Ltd., ibid., and cf. Rolls v. St. George, Southwark (Vestry of) (1880), 14 Ch. D. 785; 44 J. P. 680.

Effect of the

On these words in a private Act, JESSEL, M.R., said: "This is not the case of a mere easement. The barrel of the sewer—that portion of the subsoil—vests in you (the local authority) under the section. . . . It was found under the old law, and it was sometimes held, that the sewer authorities (they were not called sewer authorities in those days) had only an easement, and it was found to be very inconvenient, and consequently in the modern Acts the property in the sewers has been vested in the sewer authorities. That is to say, that instead of allowing the subsoil to remain in the owner of the soil, subject to an easement or right of sewerage or drainage, the absolute property in the sewer (which means not only the brick barrel or whatever it may be forming the sewer, but the whole interior of the sewer—that is, the whole of the space occupied by it) is now vested in the sewer authorities. And if the sewer is a large one, it amounts in substance to the whole of the subsoil, and that is absolutely vested in the corporation" (Taylor v. Oldham Corporation (1876), 4 Ch. D., at p. 411). This statement of the law was approved by WALTON, J., in Ystradgynodwg and Pontypridd Main Sewerage Board v. Bensted, [1906] 1 K. B. 294; 70 J. P. 240, affirmed in House of Lords (see infra); and by WARRINGTON, J., in Pensel and Wilson v. Tucker, supra. See also as to the meaning of the words vest in, the cases cited upon the same words in the notes to s. 149, post, p. 273.

rights and liabilities.

In Att.-Gen. v. Dorking Guardians (1882), 20 Ch. D., at p. 604, JESSEL, M.R., said that the vesting of a sewer in a local authority gave them only a modified and limited right of ownership, and did not give them a right to stop up a sewer. But such vesting gives them an interest in land within the meaning of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 68 (per Lord ESHER, M.R., in Birkenhead (Mayor, etc. of) v. L. & N. W. Rail. Co. (1885), 15 Q. B. D. 578; 50 J. P. 84).

The provision that all existing and future sewers within the district of a local authority, subject to the exceptions therein mentioned, "shall vest in and be under the control of such local authority," is not confined to sewers under public roads (cf. Scott v. Dunoon Magistrates, [1909] S. C. 1093); but it does not make the sewers absolutely theirs so as to render them to all intents and purposes the same as if they were private owners of the sewers. Therefore they are not under all circumstances necessarily liable in respect of nuisances or pollution arising therefrom: see cases in notes to s. 17, post, especially R. v. Staines L. B., and cases cited therewith on p. 68, and Glossop v. Heston and Isleworth L. B., and the line of cases following that decision on pp. 66 et seq.; see also Fordom v. Parsons, and succeeding cases on p. 50, post. They can, without joining the Attorney-General, and without alleging special damage, maintain an action for a declaration as to their rights against a person who misuses their sewers, e.g., who discharges noxious matter into a storm-water gully (Harwich Corporation v. Brewster (1901), 17 T. L. R. 274).

Rateability
of sewers.

It has now been declared by the House of Lords that sewers, whether overground or underground, are rateable whenever the occupation of them is "valuable" within the meaning of the authorities upon rating (West Kent Main Sewerage Board v. Dartford Union, [1911] A. C. 171; 75 J. P. 305, where the earlier cases are discussed); for the similar rule in Scotland, see Aberdeen Assessor v. Aberdeen Corporation, [1913] S. C. 712. The general rule deducible from the authorities on rating appears to be that where a public body have a duty to perform which necessitates the occupation of land, their occupation of any particular piece of land for the purpose of performing that duty is "valuable" to them; and, even though they happen to own it, they must be regarded as possible tenants. It would seem that the cost of construction is, as a rule, the only available basis for valuing sewers. Cf. Water of Leith Commissioners v. Mullochan Assessor (1913), 51 Sc. L. R. 177. Note to Section 13.

As to the chargeability of local authorities to income tax in respect of sewers, see Ystradgynog and Pontypridd Main Sewerage Board v. Bensted, [1907] A. C. 264; 71 J. P. 425. A sewer was vested in and under the control of a sewerage board for a united drainage district as the local sanitary authority for the purposes of such a sewer. The sewer, which was seventeen miles in length, was constructed partly underground, partly on the surface, and partly in an embankment. No change was made by reason of its construction in the assessments under Sched. A. of the Income Tax Act, 1842, of the owners or occupiers of the lands over, through, or under which it was constructed. The sewerage board derived no profit from the sewer:—Held, that the sewer was a hereditament capable of actual occupation, that the board were in occupation, and were assessable to income tax under Sched. A., No. I., upon the annual value of the sewer. Schedule A., No. III., applies to the properties therein specified when such properties are used as trading concerns for the purpose of earning profits; a sewer vested in a public authority and out of which no profit can be made, is assessable under No. I. and not under No. III. (ibid.). Cf. also Inland Revenue v. Edinburgh Magistrates, [1907] S. C. 1233, cited in note to s. 169, post, p. 389.

(i) This was a new provision, required to meet the action of local authorities in neighbouring districts, under ss. 28 and 285, as well as the case of special private Acts which provide for the sewerage of extensive districts. It will be observed that it applies both to sewers already constructed at the time of the passing of the Act, and to sewers thereafter to be constructed. Sewers vested in other bodies.

14. Any local authority may purchase or otherwise acquire (a) from any person any sewer, or any right of making or of user or other right in or respecting a sewer (with or without any buildings works materials or things belonging thereto), within their district and any person may sell or grant to such authority any such sewer right or property belonging to him; and any purchase money paid by such authority in pursuance of this section shall be subject to the same trusts (if any) as the sewer right or property sold was subject to. Power to purchase sewers.

But any person who, previously to the purchase of a sewer by such authority, has acquired a right (b) to use such sewer shall be entitled to use the same, or any sewer substituted in lieu thereof, to the same extent as he would or might have done if the purchase had not been made.

(a) These words, which were new in 1875, enable an authority to accept the gift of a sewer, as, for instance, where it was made for private profit but the landowner gives it to the authority. Before purchasing a sewer the authority should assure themselves that it has not already become vested in them under s. 13. In a case in which an authority proposed to purchase sewers and sewage disposal works constructed by private persons, the L. G. B. held that the sewers had already become the property of the authority, and that consequently there was nothing to purchase. With regard to the sewage works, however, the Board did not consider that these were "buildings, works, materials and things belonging" to the sewers, and a loan for their cost was sanctioned. See, however, Minehead L. B. v. Luttrell and other cases, ante, p. 46.

(b) There is no limit to the extent of this right. The P. H. A., 1848, s. 44, applied only where a perpetual right had been acquired.

15. Every local authority shall keep in repair all sewers belonging to them, and shall cause to be made such repairs as may be necessary for effectually draining their district for the purposes of this Act. Maintenance and making of sewers.

The duty hereby imposed on an authority to keep in repair the sewers vested in them is not transferred by s. 19 of the P. H. A., 1890, post, p. 831, even in P. H. A., 1890, s. 19. Effect of the cases to which that section is applicable. "If it had been intended by that section to repeal the existing liability, the Act would have been differently drawn, and would have contained some express provision, the effect of which would have been to alter the Act of 1875. As the Acts stand, they leave the general liability untouched. Section 19 of the Act of 1890 gives power to make an application under s. 41 of the Act of 1875 in certain cases and entitles the local authority to recover the expenses incurred by them. Section 41 entitles the local authority, on application made to them, to enter the premises, and have the necessary work done; but that right arises only where a written application is made, stating that the drain is a nuisance or injurious to health": per WRIGHT, J., in R. v. Hastings (Mayor, etc. of), [1897] 1 Q. B. 46; 60 J. P. 759. See also Pensell and Wilson v. Tucker, ante, p. 48.

duty extends.

From the cases already cited in the notes to s. 4, ante, p. 26, it will be observed that the obligation of the authority to repair sewers, extends to all sewers except such as are not vested in them by reason of their being within the exceptions mentioned in s. 13, ante, p. 45. It extends, therefore, to sewers which have become such by reason of the acts of private persons on private land, and sometimes even to cases in which the drain of one house may have become a sewer by reason of the unauthorised connection thereto of a drain from another house.

access to re-

For the purposes of repair, the authority have an implied right of access, but that right is limited to such access as may be reasonably necessary for enabling the repair to be done. The plaintiffs, in 1843, under a local Act, constructed a sewer on land, part of which had been bought by the defendants, a railway company, but had not then been used for their works. Part of the remainder was subsequently bought by the defendants. No part of the land ever belonged to the plaintiffs. The local Act not only authorised the plaintiffs to make the sewer, but vested it in them, with a duty to repair it, without, however, giving them any express right of access thereto. In 1863 the defendants, under their special Act, constructed an embankment over the sewer, which made less easy, but did not prevent, access to it. The plaintiffs being obliged afterwards to repair, and having incurred extra expense in doing so in consequence of the embankment, claimed compensation from the defendants under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 68, and the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 6, for injuriously affecting their interest in the sewer. It was held by the Court of Appeal that as a right of access to the sewer had not been expressly given by the local Act, but had to be implied, the right of access which ought to be implied was not any particular mode of access, but such only as was reasonably necessary for enabling the repair of the sewer to be done; and that, as such access had not been prevented by the embankment, but only rendered less easy and convenient, the plaintiffs had no right to compensation (Birkenhead (Mayor, etc. of) v. L. & N. W. Rail. Co. (1885), 15 Q. B. D. 572; 50 J. P. 84). See this case distinguished where express right of access was given (Thurrock Grays, etc. Sewerage Board v. Goldsmith (1914), 139 L. T. Jo. 183). 79. J. P. 17.

See s. 26, infra, which to some extent safeguards an authority's right of access. An owner of land through which a sewer was laid agreed with the authority that he would not build so as to prevent reasonable access to the sewer. His successor in title having built a stable over the sewer, an action was brought to compel the pulling down of the same: DENMAN, J., found as a fact that the building did not substantially interfere with the authority's right of access, and dismissed the action (Sandgate L. B. v. Loney (1883), 25 Ch. D. 183 n).

can be shifted to individuals by

It was held in Fordom v. Parsons, [1894] 2 Q. B. 780; 58 J. P. 765, sub nom. Wycombe Union v. Parsons, 71 L. T. 428, that where an authority have admittedly not discharged this obligation to repair a sewer, it is not competent for them to exercise the powers conferred by ss. 94 to 96, post, p. 173, so as to evade the performance of the obligation, and, in effect, transfer it to those for whose protection the authority exists. The respondent and others from time to time connected their water-closets with a drain, without the knowledge of the authority. This drain had been an open drain taking surface water from a highway and sink-drainage from houses near it, but no water-closet drainage, and in 1863 it was covered up by the authority, the expenses being paid by a special rate. The respondent's water-closets had been connected with the drain for more than twenty years. The authority had made no byelaws or regulations as to the mode in which communications between drains and sewers were to be made, nor had they carried out any system of drainage for their district, cesspools or earth-closets being generally used. The authority having instituted proceedings against the respondent for the abatement of a nuisance at the place where the drain emptied into a ditch, the justices dismissed the complaint, and on appeal their decision was upheld (ibid.). In an earlier Irish case a householder was summoned for causing her water-closet to discharge into a water channel under the main street of N., causing a nuisance. The channel was, from its size and from having a gravel bottom, unsuited to receive faecal matter, and was only intended for surface water. There was no other sewer in N., but the authority had made arrangements for carting away sewage weekly. There was no nuisance on the defendant's premises; but the channel was in an offensive state, and a justice ordered the defendant to disconnect the water-closet, so as to prevent any discharge from it into the channel. It was held that the justice's order was wrong (Molloy v. Gray (1889), 24 L. R. Ir. 258). Dowse, J. (dissenting), held that, as the channel was obviously unfit to take sewage, the connection with it was wrongful, and did not justify the defendant's acts. The other two judges apparently considered that, having regard to the lapse of time and other circumstances, the authority could not dispute the legality of the connection. See also Kirkheaton L. B. v. Beaumont and other cases, on p. 30, ante.

Note to
Section 15.

But in a later case (Wincanton R. D. C. v. Parsons, [1905] 2 K. B. 34; 69 J. P. 242), a Divisional Court held that even if the drain there in question into which the defendant had discharged sewage (thus causing a nuisance at a fracture in the drain) had been a sewer, the defendant ought nevertheless to have ceased sending down sewage because this was the real cause of the nuisance, and was therefore responsible as the person by whose act the nuisance arose, and that he could afterwards have taken proceedings against the local authority to have the question of liability to repair decided. According to the report in the L. R. (not, however, the J. P., where the judgment is more fully reported), KENNEDY, J. (speaking with regard to proceedings for a penalty under s. 95), went further and said: "If in such proceedings the local authority bonâ fide dispute their obligation to repair, the justices cannot inquire into the question upon whom the obligation lies, and, if satisfied that but for the defendants' discharge of sewage into the pipe the nuisance would not have arisen, are bound, I think, to deal with him as the person by whose act the nuisance was caused." It is perhaps more than doubtful whether this statement of the law is correct, for the existence of an obligation on the part of a defendant involves a finding that a particular line of pipes is a drain in such a condition as to be a nuisance (see s. 91) and such a finding involves a determination whether the line of pipes is in fact a drain or a sewer. It is submitted that the decision in Fordom v. Parsons, supra, still holds good where it is proved, or must be inferred, that a connection has been lawfully made in accordance with s. 21, post, p. 77.

This section does not require an authority to provide sewers in anticipation of the future requirements of their district, or to enable a landowner to develop his land for building purposes. When a building estate is laid out, the owners may have to provide temporary means of disposing of the sewage and drainage. But when houses are actually built to such an extent as to necessitate a scheme of drainage, the duty imposed by the section will arise, and the authority will have to cause the necessary sewers to be made. So far as the new streets on the estate are concerned, that duty may be fulfilled by causing them to be sewered at the expense of the frontagers under s. 150, but the outfall to receive the sewage from such street sewers must be provided by the authority (R. v. Tynemouth R. D. C., [1896] 2 Q. B. 451; 60 J. P. 804). And see Kinson Pottery Co. v. Poole (Mayor, etc. of), [1899] 2 Q. B. 41, 49; 63 J. P. 580. In the case of rural authorities, however, the L. G. B. hold that under ordinary circumstances all necessary sewers, whether in public or private streets, should be provided at the cost of the contributory place, and they consequently withhold from the rural authority such of the powers of s. 150 or similar enactments as enable an urban authority to enforce

as to trade
effluents :

the sewerage of private streets at the cost of frontagers. The Board have recently made some exceptions to their rule in the case of parishes which have an urban character, and already possess a main drainage scheme.

Doubt has existed as to whether the above section imposes upon a local authority the duty of providing sewers of sufficient capacity to receive trade effluents.

The effect of an opinion given by the law officers to the L. G. B. (see the Third Report of the Royal Commission on Sewage Disposal, at p. xi) is that a local authority are not generally bound under the P. H. A., 1875, to provide such sewers as may be necessary to carry off all the trade effluents and liquid refuse coming from manufactories in their district, and that their obligations in this respect are defined by the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, s. 7, and are subject to the limitations stated in that section, and, further, that the obligation under the Act of 1875 of providing sewers is confined to the ordinary requirements of the district, that is to say, that authorities are only bound to provide for sewage in the ordinary sense of the term, including foul water produced in the ordinary course of domestic management, and surface water.

In Peebles v. Oswaldtwistle U. D. C., [1897] 1 Q. B. 384; 61 J. P. 166, CHARLES, J., decided that the duty of a local authority under s. 15, supra, extended to the making of sewers sufficient to carry off not merely the ordinary sewage, but also the effluents from manufactories in the district, provided they were not injurious to health. The case was taken to the Court of Appeal ([1897] 1 Q. B. D. 625; 61 J. P. 308), and subsequently to the House of Lords (sub nom. Passmore v. Oswaldtwistle U. D. C., [1898] A. C. 387; 62 J. P. 628), being there decided on another ground, viz., that the duty of an authority under s. 15 to provide sewers is only enforceable by complaint to the L. G. B. under s. 299. On the other hand, certain observations made by Lord HALSBURY therein at [1898] A. C. 396, support the opinion of the law officers. It appeared on the pleadings, or at all events was a necessary inference from them, that when the plaintiff's factory was put up in the respondents' district the sewage system was enough for ordinary purposes, and their counsel argued that in such a case the factory owner could not compel the respondents to remodel their whole drainage in order that it might carry away the factory refuse. Lord HALSBURY, referring to such argument, said: "I confess, however, that I am wholly unable to see the answer to the argument at present, if the facts are what the pleadings appear to admit them to be, because, instead of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act having, as Mr. COZENS-HARDY ingeniously argued, reference to a different subject-matter, this appear to me to be the very subject-matter that the Legislature was dealing with there. The preamble of that Act recites that it is expedient to make 'provision for the prevention of the pollution of rivers,' and, having that object before it, the Legislature has obviously intended to look at the system by which the public health is preserved in respect of sewers and drains. What does it there provide? It provides that there shall be an outlet in some form or other for what I may call manufactory refuse; but, contemplating the case which might readily arise where some manufacturer would be very glad to throw upon the rates the necessity of getting rid of his own refuse, it provides also, with reference to that obligation to get rid of the refuse, that where the drainage system of a district is 'only sufficient for the requirements of their district,' there shall not be an obligation to get rid of the refuse of a manufacturer who ought to get rid of the refuse which he is himself creating. That seems to me to be a very intelligible provision, and a very just one; otherwise a manufacturer might come to some very small district, might establish a large manufactory there which would involve, with reference to the law of nuisance, the necessity of getting rid of the refuse created by that manufactory, and there would be no individual obligation upon the person creating it. But if this section in the Public Health Act could be applied in the way it is sought to apply it here, nothing could be easier than for a manufacturer to establish a manufactory for his own profit and throw upon the rates, paid by all the inhabitants, who have no concern with the manufactory at all, the necessity for providing for that great source of expense to the manufacturer of getting rid of his own refuse. It seems to me, therefore, that the Legislature very wisely and prudently provided against such a condition of things as that;

and if that condition of things exists here as a fact, as upon the pleadings I think it is admitted that it does. I see no answer to the argument that the section in question would not entitle anybody to call upon the particular district to provide for the extra amount of refuse created by the manufacturer." The same view is supported by the judgments in Brook, Ltd. v. Meltham U. D. C. [1908] 2 K. B. 780; 72 J. P. 409. See also Butterworth and Roberts v. West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board, [1909] A. C. 45; 73 J. P. 89, per Lord MACNAGHTEN.

Note to Section 15.

Probably no general obligation;

The L. G. B. have acted on the view of the law officers. In their Annual Report for 1898-9, at p. cxx, with reference to a complaint by a firm of mill-owners that a rural district council were in default in providing sewers, they say: "We caused a local inquiry to be held by one of our inspectors with regard to the complaint, and we found that the sewers, though large enough for the conveyance of ordinary domestic sewage, were not of sufficient capacity for the reception of trade refuse. We took the opinion of the law officers of the Crown on the case, and they advised that the district council, under the circumstances, had not made default within the meaning of the Act." In the Third Report (1903) of the Royal Commission on Sewage Disposal the commissioners (p. xvii) recommend "that the law should be altered so as to make it the duty of the local authority to provide such sewers as are necessary to carry trade effluents as well as domestic sewage, and that the manufacturer shall be given the right, subject to the observance of certain safeguards, to discharge trade effluents into the sewers of the local authority if he wishes to do so."

As to the right to discharge "trade effluents" into existing sewers, see the notes to s. 21, at p. 80, post.

Additional legislation exists as to certain classes of manufacturers, viz., owners of alkali works. By s. 3 (3) of the Alkali, etc. Works Regulation Act, 1906: "On the request of the owner of any such work as is mentioned in this section the sanitary authority of the district in which such work is situate shall, at the expense of such owner, provide and maintain a drain or channel for carrying off such liquid as aforesaid produced in such work into the sea or into any river or watercourse into which the liquid can be carried without contravention of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, as amended by any subsequent enactment; and the sanitary authority shall for the purpose of providing any such drain or channel have the like powers as they have for providing sewers, whether within or without their district, under the Public Health Act. (4) Compensation shall be made to any person for any damage sustained by him by reason of the exercise by a sanitary authority of the powers conferred by this section, and such compensation shall be deemed part of the expenses to be paid by the owner making the request to the sanitary authority under this section."

It was formerly considered that the duty to construct and repair sewers could be enforced by mandamus. Cf. In re Maidenhead L. B. (1855), 26 L. T. (o.s.) 104; Ex parte Parsons (1858), 22 J. P. 68; R. v. Epsom Union (Guardians of) (1863), 8 L. T. 383; R. v. Tottenham L. B. (1893), 9 T. L. R. 414. It is now, however, established that "a default" in providing sufficient sewers or in the maintenance of existing sewers (see s. 299, post, p. 629), can be met only by the special remedy given by that section, i.e., an appeal to the L. G. B. Thus, a mandamus will not be granted to compel an authority to provide sufficient sewers (Passmore v. Oswaldtwistle U. D. C., p. 52, ante; see also Harrington (Earl) v. Derby Corporation, [1905] 1 Ch. 205; 69 J. P. 62, and Brown v. Dunstable Corporation, p. 68, post), nor will an action for damages lie in respect of mere failure to do so (Robinson v. Workington (Mayor, etc. of), infra). It is not, however, easy to say precisely what grounds of complaint as to the management of existing sewers are covered by the word "maintenance" in s. 299, and what grounds will, in spite of that section, support an action; upon this point the decisions appear to be somewhat conflicting. In Stretton's Derby Brewery Co. v. Mayor, etc. of Derby, p. 76, post, the plaintiffs' complaint was that a sewer originally of sufficient size had become insufficient owing to many new houses being connected with it, and that in wet weather it consequently became surcharged, with the result that sewage was forced back along the plaintiffs' drains and into their cellars. No argument was based on s. 299, but the plaintiffs failed, because under no mandamus, as a rule, no action.

Note to

the special circumstances the defendants—who were bonâ fide considering a new sewerage system—were held to have been guilty of no negligence or want of reasonable care and diligence. It appears, however, to have been admitted that an authority who allow a sewer to be regularly surcharged do not “keep it” so as not to be a nuisance within the meaning of s. 19, post, and would therefore be liable in damages if there was negligence. In the next case a sewer had been sufficient for the district in which the plaintiff’s houses were situated, until a number of new houses were built and drained into it. The sewer thereby became inadequate to carry off all the sewage, and some of it was bayed back and overflowed into the plaintiff’s houses, causing damage. It was held that the plaintiff had no right of action to recover damages, the essence of his complaint being that the defendants had failed to provide sufficient sewers, which was an act of nonfeasance only and one for which s. 299 provided a remedy. It was also apparently held that the words “keep so as not to be a nuisance” in s. 19 had no application to the facts (Robinson v. Workington (Mayor, etc. of), [1897] 1 Q. B. 619; 61 J. P. 164). It has been held, however, that the diversion, by an authority in the execution of their statutory powers, of sewage from one drain or sewer into another already overcharged with sewage, whereby damage is occasioned to an occupier of premises, is not a mere act of omission in the performance of duties imposed by this section, and, therefore, only a subject for compensation under s. 308, but is the commission of a legal wrong in respect of which the occupier can maintain an action (Dent v. Bournemouth (Mayor, etc. of) (1897), 66 L. J. Q. B. 395). In connection with the foregoing decisions a colonial case may be noticed. A local authority converted part of a watercourse into a sewer and subsequently a number of subsidiary channels were made by them or by their leave for carrying water and sewage into this sewer. After heavy rains the sewer became choked, and overflowed, covering certain low-lying lands with sewage and slime. It was held that the authority had been guilty of negligence, and were liable in damages, it being no defence to say that before any work was done to the watercourse, the land in question was sometimes flooded with storm water from it, or that the work originally done was sufficient at that time, since now that additional channels had been constructed it was clearly insufficient, flooding having occurred on previous occasions. Per Lord MACNAGHTEN: “As for negligence, it is difficult to imagine a more conspicuous example of negligence than is shown by repeatedly pouring offensive stuff into a receptacle or channel proved over and over again to be insufficient to hold and pass it on. They might just as well pour this stuff directly on the plaintiff’s land” (Hawthorn Corporation v. Kannuluk, [1906] A. C. 105). See also a somewhat similar Scotch case, Hanley v. Edinburgh Corporation, [1912] S. C. 1199. In another case an action was brought to recover damages for injury to a wall by the overflow from a sewer vested in the defendants. In times of storm the water filled the sewer, and was forced up a branch drain into a brook adjoining the wall, which was thereby damaged. The jury found that the defendants were not negligent in not having sufficient sewers to carry off the sewage, that the overflow arose from an extraordinary storm which could not have been relieved by ordinary care, but that the defendants should, having regard to a previous overflow in the preceding year, have had storm openings put in the sewer. The Court of Appeal held that what the plaintiff was seeking to compel the defendants to do amounted to an alteration of, or improvement in, their system for the purpose of carrying off storm water, and that the only remedy was by complaint to the L. G. B. (Jones v. Barking U. D. C., Times, December 9th, 1898).

In Whitfield v. Bishop Auckland U. D. C., Times, November 22nd, 1897, an action was brought to recover damages for negligence in failing to maintain and repair a sewer. The jury found that the sewer was badly constructed by reason of defective joints; that it was improperly and negligently maintained, because the defendants did not open out the whole of it on an occasion when they partially repaired it, and that the plaintiff’s houses had been injured by the escape of water from the sewer. On these findings, WRIGHT, J., gave judgment for the plaintiff; and an appeal failed (W. N. (1898) 37).

Baron v. Portlade U. D. C. (p. 75, post), was a successful action for breach of the duty to “cleanse” an open sewer in accordance with s. 19; Lord HALSBURY, L.C., in delivering the judgment of the Court of Appeal, said as to s. 299 : "I agree that the maintenance of a sewer is not the same thing as that which it is the authority's duty to do by virtue of s. 19. . . . Section 299 does not, in my opinion, touch the duty of the authority to use proper diligence in the management of existing sewers, and I cannot see either in the section or in the cases cited anything to take away the right of action of a person who has sustained an injury through the neglect of the authority." In Att.-Gen. v. Lewes Corporation, [1911] 2 Ch. 495 ; 76 J. P. 1, a watercourse had been culverted and converted into a sewer. The brickwork of the culvert was in bad repair, and when the tide dammed the sewage back it was constantly forced through holes and cracks on to land of the relator plaintiff. He was held entitled to damages. It is not clear whether this decision was based on the view that s. 299 has no reference to the physical condition of a sewer (cf. Baron v. Portslade U. D. C. ; Harrington (Earl) v. Derby Corporation, supra), or on the view (see per SWINFEN EADY, J., at [1911] 2 Ch. 507), that s. 299 gives no remedy in damages ; the latter seems inconsistent with Robinson v. Workington Corporation, supra.

Note to
Section 15.

It should be mentioned that there is no section in the Metropolis Management Acts corresponding to s. 299, post, p. 629. It has, therefore, been held that mandamus will lie to compel performance of the duty imposed by the corresponding sections of these Acts. See R. v. St. Mary, Islington, Times, August 3rd, 1898 ; R. (or Lee District Board) v. London C. C. (1899), 64 J. P. 20 ; 82 L. T. 396 ; St. Matthew, Bethnal Green (Vestry) v. London School Board, [1898] A. C. 190 ; 62 J. P. 532. In an earlier case it was held that the proper form of remedy was not a motion for a prerogative writ of mandamus, but an action for a declaration and a mandamus (R. v. St. Giles, Camberwell (Vestry of) (1897), 66 L. J. Q. B. 337 ; 61 J. P. 217).

Although an authority may under s. 18, post, p. 74, cover or pipe in a watercourse which has in fact become a "sewer," the present section does not entitle them to arch over a watercourse containing pure water, with a view to its afterwards carrying sewage, for the Act does not authorise the commission of a nuisance (Att.-Gen. v. Hackney L. B. (1875), L. R. 20 Eq. 626 : see also Pentney v. Lynn Paving Commissioners (1865), 12 L. T. 818). Nor may they construct a sewer which will cause a nuisance by its discharge into a stream (see cases in notes to s. 17), or on to land (see Brown v. Dunstable (Mayor, etc. of), p. 68, post ; Lamacraft v. St. Thomas' R. S. A. (1880), 44 J. P. 441 ; 42 L. T. 365).

16. Any local authority may carry any sewer through across or under any turnpike road, or any street (a) or place laid out as or intended for a street, or under (b) any cellar or vault which may be under the pavement or carriageway of any street, and, after giving reasonable notice in writing to the owner or occupier (c) (if on the report of the surveyor it appears necessary (d)), into through or under (e) any lands whatsoever within their district (f).

They may also (subject to the provisions of this Act relating to sewage works without the district of the local authority (g)) exercise all or any of the powers given by this section without their district for the purpose of outfall or distribution of sewage.

The words "through across or under," leave it to the discretion of the authority whether they will carry the sewer above or under a street, the legislature assuming that they will carry it in such manner as not to interfere with the traffic (per JESSEL, M.R., in Roderick v. Aston L. B. (1877), 5 Ch. D. 328 ; 41 J. P. 516).

(b) Not "into, through, or across" (Roderick v. Aston L. B., supra).

(c) These words were wanting in the P. H. A., 1848, s. 45, and it was left vague in private to whom the notice was to be given. Here it is provided that notice is to be given lands ; to the owner (see s. 4, ante, p. 8, for this definition), or to the occupier. The interposition of these words has given some awkwardness to the parenthesis ; but the report of the surveyor relates not to the notice, but to the necessity for passing through the lands. An injunction may be granted to restrain an authority from constructing a sewer through private lands, on the ground that reasonable notice in writing has not been given, and that the surveyor has not reported the construction to be necessary as required by this section (New River Co. v. Ware Union R. S. A. (1883), L. J. Notes of Cases, p. 20 ; Lewis v. Weston-super-Mare L. B., infra). But if the work was done with the owner's assent, he will not succeed in obtaining an injunction or damages merely because the preliminary requirements of the section have not been complied with : see Long v. Fulham Vestry (1898), 47 W. R. 56. Nor will he as a rule succeed on technical grounds when he has had full knowledge of the authority's proposals. Thus, in one case, an interlocutory injunction was applied for on the ground that reasonable notice had not been given and that the report of the surveyor did not show it to be necessary to carry the sewer through the plaintiff's land. CHANNELL, J. refused an injunction, holding that if there were any defects in the notice or report they could easily be remedied, and the Court of Appeal also refused to interfere (Hutchings v. Seaford U. D. C., Times, November 11th, 1898). The action came on for trial, after the sewer had been laid, and the plaintiff asked for a mandatory injunction to remove it. It appeared that it was constructed across a field, and that there had been long negotiations between the parties, and in these circumstances NORTH, J., said that it did not matter whether a week or six days' notice was sufficient, and that as it had been shown that the sewer was necessary, judgment must be given for the defendants (Times, November 6th, 1899) ; cf. also Cleckheaton U. D. C. v. Firth, on p. 94, post ; Montgomerie & Co. v. Haddington Corporation, [1908] A. C. 170, and Scott v. Dunoon Magistrates, [1909] S. C. 1093, where a purchaser of land failed to compel the removal of a sewer, the existence of which was unknown to him at the time of purchase. It was there held that the provision for giving notice was for the owner's protection, and could be waived by him.

of notice.

As to the authentication and service of the notice, see ss. 266, 267, post, p. 590. For forms of report and notice, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., pp. 511, 512. A notice, specifying the object to be the construction of a sewer of certain dimensions, to enter at a certain spot and to go in an oblique direction from that spot without a map was held to be a reasonable one (Cleckheaton I. S. H. Society v. Jackson (1866), 14 W. R. 950). The notice may be withdrawn at any time before the commencement of the work (Davis v. Witney U. D. C. (1899), 63 J. P. 279 ; 15 T. L. R. 275). Perhaps, however, if the landowner has in consequence of the service of the notice sustained any damage, he may, notwithstanding its withdrawal, recover compensation for such damage (ibid., per A. L. SMITH, L.J.).

authority.

(d) In Derby (Earl) v. Bury Commissioners (1868—1869), L. R. 3 Ex. 121 ; 4 Ex. 222 ; 33 J. P. 424, the Exchequer Chamber ruled that "the necessity for making a new sewer being ascertained as a matter of fact, it was for the local authority to exercise their judgment in what direction that new sewer should be made through the adjoining land, and so long as they exercise an honest discretion without misconduct or negligence, they are not liable to have their judgment overruled in a court of law" ; cf. Stroud v. Wandsworth Board of Works, [1894] 1 Q. B. 64 ; 58 J. P. 40.

The provisions of this section are extended to the laying of water mains by s. 54, post, p. 126. In December, the surveyor of the defendants, an urban authority, died. In January they, by resolution, appointed A. P., an engineer in their employment, "surveyor to the board until a further permanent surveyor be appointed." In March, A. P. reported to the defendants that it was "desirable and advisable" that their water main should be carried in a particular direction from one point to another, and that it would be "necessary" to lay it through land belonging to the plaintiff. This report was signed "your surveyor, A. P." Four days after its date X. Y. was duly appointed surveyor to the defendants, and A. P., who was a candidate for the office, was retained in their service as water-works engineer. The report was considered and adopted by the board in April, and in May a notice in pursuance thereof was served on the plaintiff that the defendants intended to carry their main through a part of his lands. Upon motion made in an action by the plaintiff for an injunction to restrain the defendants from so doing it was held,—First, that the word “necessary” must be construed as meaning “necessary for the efficient discharge of the duty in the way most for the benefit of the public”;—Secondly, that upon the words of s. 16 the person to determine the necessity was the surveyor; and that if the court found that he had exercised his judgment and come to a conclusion in good faith, it ought not to interfere, even although other courses were shown to be practicable by which entry on private lands might be avoided; and, Thirdly, that “the surveyor” mentioned in s. 16 must, in the case of an urban authority, be the fit and proper person duly appointed to be the surveyor under s. 189 of the Act, and no other; that A. P. was not “the surveyor” of the defendants within the meaning of ss. 16 and 189; and that, as the report on which the proceedings of the defendants were founded was not the report of “the surveyor,” the plaintiff was entitled to an interlocutory injunction (Lewis v. Weston-super-Mare L. B. (1888), 40 Ch. D. 55); cf. R. v. Halkett, [1910] 1 K. B. 50; 74 J. P. 12, where it was held that an officer appointed to act as a chief constable’s deputy during the latter’s holiday, could not give the written consent required for a prosecution under the Sunday Observance Act, 1871. The Weston-super-Mare Case, supra, was distinguished in Kenal v. Levisham Borough Council (1903), 67 J. P. 236; 19 T. L. R. 384, KEKEWICH, J., holding that an order under the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, s. 105, is valid if made by an acting surveyor of the council, on the ground that in s. 105 the expression is “surveyor for the time being.” An appeal was settled ((1903), 20 T. L. R. 21).

In Brown v. Kircudbright Magistrates (1905), 8 F. 77, a surveyor reported that a certain course for a proposed sewer “seems the best and most practical way of taking it . . . to carry out this plan it is necessary” to carry the sewer across certain lands:—Held, under a very similar provision, to be a sufficient report.

(e) Under this section a local board proceeded to carry a sewer across the plaintiff’s pleasure grounds, on such a level that the bottom of the sewer would be only slightly below the surface, and a permanent embankment about six feet high would be made. The Court of Appeal held that they might do so, and that the Act did not confine them to carrying a sewer underground (Roderick v. Aston L. B. (1877), 5 Ch. D. 328; 41 J. P. 516). A manhole is part of the sewer, and may be made without purchasing land for the purpose, the owner of the land being entitled only to compensation for the damages arising from making it (Swanston v. Twickenham L. B. (1879), 11 Ch. D. 838). But an engine house with pump and machinery erected partly above and partly below the level of the ground, for lifting and forcing sewage along a rising main from one part of a district to another where there is a common outfall, is not part of a sewer for the purposes of this section, but is a work for the purpose of receiving and otherwise disposing of sewage within s. 27, post, p. 88, for which the necessary land must be purchased or leased (King’s College, Cambridge v. Uxbridge R. D. C., [1901] 2 Ch. 768). An iron pipe laid temporarily to carry off effluent water from sewage works is a sewer within this provision (Tottenham L. B. v. Button (1886), 2 T. L. R. 828). It has been doubted whether an “overflow” sewer is a sewer for all purposes within the meaning of the Act (see Leeds and District Worsted Dyers’ and Finishers’ Association v. West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board (1906), 70 J. P. 480; 5 L. G. R. 72), but it is submitted that such a sewer is a sewer within the meaning of s. 16.

If an owner of land refuses to allow an authority to enter for the purpose of making a sewer under this section, it would appear that they ought to commence an action for a declaration of their right to enter, for it seems that s. 305 does not enable them to obtain from a court of summary jurisdiction an order authorising such entry (per COCKBURN, C.J., in Lamacraft v. St. Thomas’ R. S. A. (1880), 44 J. P. 441; 42 L. T. 365; and see to the same effect per DENMAN, J., in Wheatcroft v. Matlock L. B. (1885), 52 L. T. 356). “The word ‘lands’ as used in this section is, by the definition clause (s. 4), extended so as to mean any tenement or hereditament, and obviously includes lands covered with water”: per LINDLEY, L.J., in Durrant v. Branksome U. D. C., [1897] 2 Ch. 291, 301. So that the section enables an authority to carry their sewers into streams, etc., subject, of course, to s. 17, post, p. 59, and to making compensation under s. 308, post, p. 638. The right is subject also to the limitations imposed by s. 327. See that section and Thames Conservators v. Walton-upon-Thames U. D. C., in the notes thereto.

A local authority are liable in an action for damages, and may be restrained by injunction from proceeding under this section, if the proposed sewer would cause a nuisance (Lamacraft v. St. Thomas' R. S. A., supra).

railways :

In carrying sewers under canals and other properties which are the subject of special protective provisions (see ss. 327, 332), an authority must be careful to obtain all requisite consents. Railway property is not mentioned in the sections quoted, but it is desirable that the company should be consulted before a sewer is laid under such property. Where it is proposed to lay a sewer beneath a railway line, the L. G. B. will probably require the company's consent before they will pass the scheme.

purchased.

Under the corresponding sections of the Metropolis Management Acts it was held that a sewer might be made, subject to compensation being paid, without actually taking lands under the provisions of those Acts which enable lands to be taken (North London Rail. Co. v. Metropolitan Board of Works (1859), 28 L. J. Ch. 909; 23 J. P. 515; Hughes v. Metropolitan Board of Works (1861), 25 J. P. 675; 4 L. T. 318); and the same view has been taken of the corresponding sections of the Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1897 (Caledonian Rail. Co. v. Perth District Committee (1901), 3 F. 1029). Where a local authority, having power under a local Act to erect and maintain electric cable standards "on, in, over or under any street or road," erected such a standard in the pavement, it was held that their act, although the standard was sunk in the soil to a considerable depth, did not amount to a "taking of land" (Escott v. Newport Corporation, [1904] 2 K. B. 369; 68 J. P. 135). Under an earlier Act, the surveyor of a local board having reported that it was necessary to make a sewer through N.'s lands, the necessary steps were taken and authority given to the surveyor. N. obstructed the surveyor; and, being summoned before justices for so doing, contended that proceedings ought first to have been taken to acquire the land under the Lands Clauses Act. It was held that this was no answer to the summons, as the land need not have been so acquired before the sewer was laid in it (Thornton v. Nutter (1867), 31 J. P. 419). "It is said that independently of this section they (the authority) have power to purchase land, and that what they are doing is injuring the plaintiffs to such an extent, that it is equivalent to taking the whole of the land. Well, if what is done is equivalent to taking the whole of the land, the plaintiffs will get compensation for the whole of the land": per JESSEL, M.R., in Roderick v. Aston L. B., p. 55, ante. See also the remarks of the same judge, quoted on p. 48, ante.

Authority's

Although the remedy of a person who sustains damage by the laying of a sewer in his lands is to claim compensation under s. 308, post, yet an authority are liable in damages to any person who sustains injury by reason of their negligence in laying it. See notes to s. 308, post, p. 638, and cases there cited, especially Clothier v. Webster (1862), 6 L. T. 461. As to the liability of an authority for the negligence of their contractor in laying a sewer, see cases cited in the notes to s. 265, post, p. 581, especially Hardaker v. Idle U. D. C., [1896] 1 Q. B. 335; 60 J. P. 196.

An authority making a sewer might or might not, prior to August 25th, 1883, acquire a right to lateral support from owners of adjoining lands (see Metropolitan Board of Works v. Metropolitan Rail. Co. (1868—1869), L. R. 3 C. P. 612; 4 C. P. 192; Roderick v. Aston L. B., supra; In re Dudley Corporation, infra; and Jary v. Barnsley Corporation, infra). Such a right of support might before 1883 have been gained against the owner of the lands in which the sewer was laid, and this might have been taken into account in estimating the compensation to which he was entitled (per JESSEL, M.R., in Roderick v. Aston L. B., supra; In re Dudley Corporation (1881), 8 Q. B. D. 86; 46 J. P. 340; Jary v. Barnsley Corporation, [1907] 2 Ch. 600; 71 J. P. 468). But since the passing of the Public Health (Support of Sewers) Act, 1883, post, p. 715, an authority cannot acquire any right of support, vertical or lateral, as against the owner of mines, except as in that Act provided (s. 4). It would appear, therefore, that in general the right or obligation of support should not be taken into account in estimating the compensation for laying a sewer in private lands, as such a right is not now conferred by enjoyment for any length of time, and may under the Act here referred to form the subject of future compensation.

Note to
Section 16.

As to the assessment of compensation, see Colac (Ratepayers of) v. Summerfield, [1893] A. C. 187, and cases cited in notes to s. 308, post, p. 638. It would appear that the owner of the soil of a highway under which a sewer is laid is entitled to compensation for damage done to the subsoil (Northam Bridge and Roads (Proprietors of) v. South Stoneham R. D. C. (1907), 71 J. P. 345; 23 T. L. R. 476; cf. Ramsden v. Manchester, etc. Rail. Co. (1848), 1 Ex. 723). A notice to lay a sewer was given under this section and the owner claimed compensation. Both parties appointed arbitrators to determine the amount of "damage caused by the construction and execution of the sewer," but after they had met the authority withdrew their notice, the works not having been commenced, and offered to pay the owner's taxed costs up to the time of such withdrawal. The arbitrators awarded £10 as compensation for the damage sustained and also costs. It was held that they had no jurisdiction to award either damages or costs under the submission in question (Davis v. Witney U. D. C. (1899), 63 J. P. 279; 15 T. L. R. 275). Semble, however, that compensation might have been allowed for expenses properly incurred between the date of the notice and its withdrawal if this question had been submitted (ibid.).

(f) The P. H. A., 1848, s. 45, did not contain these words. But notwithstanding the generality of the expression, it was held that a local board could not make sewers out of their district (Haywood v. Loundes (1859), 28 L. J. Ch. 400). This decision led to the passing of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 61, which contained the enactment in the next paragraph, and the provisions therein referred to, which are set out in ss. 32—34, post, pp. 93—95. As to the power of an authority outside the boundary of its district in other respects see R. v. Warner (1858), 27 L. J. M. C. 144; Hornsey (Mayor of) v. Birkbeck Freehold Land Society, [1906] 1 K. B. 521; 70 J. P. 140; Shoreditch Borough Council v. Wakeham (1905), 69 J. P. 239; R. v. Cheshire JJ.; Ex parte Vyner (No. 2) (1909), 73 J. P. 499; 101 L. T. 683; Alderson v. Bishop Auckland U. D. C., [1913] 2 K. B. 324; and cf. Wordie v. Lanarkshire C. C. (1895), 23 R. 168.

(g) See ss. 32—34, post, pp. 93—95. These sections are, by s. 54, post, Outfall and p. 126, rendered applicable also to the laying of water mains without the district, distribution even where the consent of the adjoining authority has been procured under s. 285, works. post, p. 616. See Jones v. Conway and Colwyn Bay Joint Water Supply Board, [1893] 2 Ch. 603; 57 J. P. 501.

17. Nothing in this Act shall authorise any local authority to make Sewage to be purified before being discharged into streams. or use any sewer drain or outfall for the purpose of conveying sewage or filthy water into any natural stream or watercourse, or into any canal pond or lake until such sewage or filthy water is freed from all excrementitious or other foul or noxious matter such as would affect or deteriorate the purity and quality of the water in such stream or water-course or in such canal pond or lake.

This clause formed a proviso to 24 & 25 Vict. c. 61, s. 4, and, though it appears here as a separate section, is to be regarded as a proviso (see Harrington (Earl of) v. Derby Corporation, on p. 69, post, and cf. note to s. 1, on p. 1, ante). Its effect is that if the sewage or filthy water be duly purified in the manner described, it may be discharged into the stream, canal, lake, or pond (Durrant v. Branksome U. D. C., [1897] 2 Ch. 291). The only prohibition contained in the section as regards natural streams is against conveying into any natural stream such sewage or filthy water as will prejudicially affect the purity of the stream. Therefore where sewage or other filthy water is conveyed into an already polluted stream no offence is committed against the section unless the stream is thereby made fouler than it was before (Att.-Gen. v. Birmingham, etc. Drainage Board, p. 65, post).

As to what is a "stream or watercourse," see note to s. 69, post, p. 145, and "Stream or water-course." Pearce v. Croydon U. D. C. (1910), 74 J. P. 429. In that case the defendants caused certain surface drainage to flow across the plaintiff's land, and pleaded (a) that there was a "watercourse" across such land, or (b) that there was a "sewer" across it, and that they were entitled to turn the water into such watercourse or sewer. The land was subject to floods by periodical "bourne flows" from the chalk, and the course taken by such flows was the alleged watercourse or sewer. It was held on the facts that such course was neither a watercourse nor a sewer, and that the plaintiff was entitled to damages for trespass and an injunction. As to a stream or watercourse becoming a "sewer," see p. 26, ante. The section does not justify a discharge into an agricultural ditch which is not a natural stream or watercourse, and which, though a "sewer," is one "made for profit" (Phillimore v. Watford R. D. C., [1913] 2 Ch. 434; 77 J. P. 453).

Generally speaking, an authority cannot disconnect a drain once properly connected with their sewer in order to avoid difficulties arising from the discharge of such sewer (Ainley v. Kirkheaton L. B. (1891), 60 L. J. Ch. 734; 55 J. P. 230). In that case the plaintiffs, owners of a large mill in the defendant's district, built water-closets for the accommodation of their workmen, and connected the same by a drain with the defendants' sewer. The sewer was formerly an open watercourse, and drained into a natural watercourse. Proceedings were taken against the defendants for fouling this watercourse, and an application for a mandamus to compel them to make a proper system of drainage was adjourned upon their undertaking to close the communication between the plaintiffs' drain and their sewer, or to take proceedings against the plaintiffs under the Rivers Pollution Prevention Acts. The defendants thereupon gave to the plaintiffs formal notice of their intention to cut off the drain, and the plaintiffs brought an action to restrain them from so doing. The plaintiffs had not given any notice to the defendants of their intention to connect their drain with the sewer; but the connection had been in existence for eight years, and the judge found that it was not proved to have been made in contravention of s. 21, post. It was held that s. 21 conferred on the plaintiffs the right to drain into the existing sewer, and that it lay on the defendants to see that the sewer was so arranged that it did not contravene s. 17. STIRLING, J., held that the duty is thrown upon the authority to make all necessary sewers, and that it is for them to see that the sewers so made do not convey any sewage water into any natural stream or watercourse until the sewage is freed from all excrementitious or foul or noxious matter—that is to say, that they are not prohibited from making a sewer, the natural effect of which would be to convey such sewage into a stream or watercourse, but before they use it they must take care that the sewage is free from the foul and noxious matter. He held also that the section affects not the individual owner, but the local authority, and that the right conferred by s. 21 on an owner of premises to connect his drains with a sewer was an absolute right. This decision has since been frequently followed; see cases in note (d) to s. 21, p. 78, post. It may well be, however, that an authority could by injunction compel the disconnection of a drain proved to have been improperly connected, e.g., without complying with the formalities required by s. 21, or to a sewer not intended for the conveyance of sewage; see cases cited in notes to s. 21 on p. 78, post, and Gibbins v. Hungerford, [1904] 1 I. R. 211. In that case the corporation of C. had for many years by permission discharged surface-water from a public road into a pond on the plaintiff's land through a drain belonging to the corporation. Subsequently, as the drain became offensive, the water was, at the plaintiff's request, diverted into a cesspool made by the corporation on his land. By direction of the corporation the defendant H. connected some new houses with the drain. No permission was given by the plaintiff for this to be done. It was held that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction against the corporation and H. restraining them from discharging the house sewage on his land, and to a mandatory injunction to disconnect the houses from the drain, but that the corporation should pay the costs both of the plaintiff and H. There was a difference of opinion as to whether the act of an authority in directing or permitting sewage to be delivered into a sewer from which it cannot be discharged without creating a nuisance, is ab initio unlawful, rendering every person contributing to the nuisance liable to be restrained. FITZGIBBON, L.J., thought that individuals who had connected their drains might be restrained; HOLMES, L.J., thought otherwise. Lord ASHBORNE, L.C., thought the injunction was rightly granted against both. The facts of the case were peculiar, and it cannot be regarded as a precedent for the granting of injunctions against persons who lawfully connect their drains with sewers. Note to Section 17.

This is a convenient place for a more detailed statement of the liabilities of local authorities in exercising their powers of making sewers. The following are the principal cases as to the rights of persons against authorities for polluting streams by sewage. (They are for the most part arranged in chronological order.) Liability of authority for polluting a stream.

In Oldacre v. Hunt (1855), 6 De G. M. & G. 376, a local board proposed to carry a sewer through certain fields into the river Avon. The owners of those fields, which adjoined the river, had watering places therein; they had also a several fishery in the river, though not otherwise interested in the bed of it, and they had not given their consent to the works. The Master of the Rolls granted an injunction to restrain the board from proceeding with the sewer, and this injunction was confirmed by the Lords Justices, assisted by CRESSWELL and WILLIAMS, J.J. In their opinion, the plaintiffs were interested in the river by reason of their watering places, independently of their right to the fishery, which also appeared to the judges to be fairly included under the term land. In Att.-Gen. v. Luton L. B. (1856), 20 J. P. 163, it appeared that the local board carried the whole drainage of the town into the river Lea, which flowed through the land of the relator, who had a mill on its banks. It was not a public navigable river, and a few houses had drained into it previous to 1848; but the works of the board greatly increased the sewage, and polluted the water to such an extent that sheep could not be washed in it. It was held that the board could not justify their proceedings, and that as the relator was interested in the river, and had not given his consent, he was entitled to an interlocutory injunction to restrain them from extending their works. WOOD, V.-C., pointed out that if the owners of the houses erected before 1848 had any right to drain into the river so as to interfere with the plaintiff's rights as a riparian owner such right could only be acquired by prescription, but the board being quite a modern corporation, established since 1848, could have no such rights. The prescriptive right here referred to is merely a right as against individuals. It will be seen hereafter that there can be no prescriptive right to pollute a stream so as to cause a public nuisance. In M. S. & L. Rail. Co. v. Worksop L. B. (1857), 26 L. J. Ch. 345, the plaintiffs, owners of a canal, had a right to supply water to their canal out of such brooks, streams and watercourses as were within 1,000 yards of it, and the exclusive right to the water in the canal. It was held that this power did not so far extend to rain and other surface water, which, being collected on a road, ran along an open gutter into the canal, as to preclude the local board from allowing it to fall through gratings into a sewer which they had made under the road. But it was also held that the board must be restrained from permitting sewage communications to be made between houses and the sewer so long as the sewer discharged into the canal. See also Southampton and Itchin Bridge Co. v. Southampton L. B. (1858), 8 E. & B. 801, an action for polluting a canal by improper and negligent construction and management of a sewer. In Rigby v. Mayor, etc. of Bristol (1860), 29 L. J. Ex. 359, BRAMWELL, B., said: "Suppose a person had, for twenty or thirty years, been in the habit of turning his sewer into a river or other natural stream, it is clear that no action would lie against him for so doing; and why should not a corporation have the power of acquiring a similar right?" There was not, however, in that case any suggestion that the pollution complained of amounted to a public nuisance, nor had the case any reference to the section above set out.

In Att.-Gen. v. Birmingham Corporation (1858), 4 Kay & J. 528, it was held that works executed in pursuance of a statutory duty must be so executed as not to interfere with the private rights of individuals, and that in deciding on the right of a single proprietor to an injunction to restrain such interference, the circumstances that a vast population will suffer (by remaining undrained) unless his rights are invaded, is one which the court cannot consider. The defendants were bound by a local Act, incorporating the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, effectually to drain the town. It was held that they were not justified in so carrying on their operations as to drive away fish and prevent cattle from drinking the water of a river at a point seven miles below the town, where it belonged to the plaintiff. It was held also, that assuming the inhabitants to have had before their Act a right to drain their houses into the river, this circumstance would not justify the defendants in discharging their sewage in such a manner as to subject the plaintiff to the inconvenience of which he now complained. And it was further held, that although the plaintiff had submitted to the injury for nearly four years, trusting to the assurance of the council that they were carrying out a scheme of sewerage by which eventually the evil would be removed, he was not precluded on the ground of laches from now applying for an injunction, the rule in such cases being that the mere prospect of injury does not give a right to this relief. In Bidder v. Croydon L. B. (1862), 6 L. T. 778, the defendants had caused the sewage of the town to be conveyed into the river Wandle. It had not been completely deodorised before entering the river, and had so polluted the water as to kill the fish, and otherwise cause a nuisance. It was held that a riparian owner was entitled to an injunction to restrain further pollution of the water. Sutcliffe v. Booth (1863), 32 L. J. Q. B. 136; 27 J. P. 613, was an action by one riparian proprietor against another, and is only mentioned here in its order as deciding that a watercourse, though artificial, may have been made under such circumstances and have been so used as to give all the rights that the riparian owners would have had if it had been a natural stream. (This case was considered and approved in Roberts v. Richards (1881), 50 L. J. Ch. 297; 51 L. J. Ch. 944, and was followed in Bailey & Co. v. Clark, Son & Morland, [1902] 1 Ch. 649.) The case of Att.-Gen. v. Metropolitan Board of Works (1863), 9 L. T. 139, had reference to the Acts incorporating that body; it was held that these Acts did not empower them to create a nuisance by polluting a stream. In Cator v. Lewisham Board of Works (1864), 5 B. & S. 115, the plaintiff was the owner of land through which the Poole river flowed, such land being beyond the defendants' district. The defendants executed drainage works within their district by means of which sewage was conveyed into a tributary of the Poole river. The sewage had for many years been carried into the stream, but only so as to pollute the water in an inappreciable degree; but the result of the defendants' works was to do substantial injury to the plaintiff. It was held by the Exchequer Chamber that the plaintiff was entitled to sue, and was not precluded by the clauses of the Metropolis Management Acts, which give persons who sustain damage the right to compensation, for the defendants were not justified in causing a nuisance. See also Price's Patent Candle Co. v. London C. C., [1908] 2 Ch. 526; 72 J. P. 429 (affirmed, 75 J. P. 329—H. L.), where it was held that nothing in the Metropolis Management Acts authorised the defendants to commit a nuisance by discharging storm water mixed with sewage into a tidal creek. In Att.-Gen. v. Mayor, etc. of Kingston-on-Thames (1865), 34 L. J. Ch. 481; 29 J. P. 515, the defendants adopted a new scheme of drainage, whereby a largely increased amount of sewage would be poured into the Thames. The court refused to grant an injunction on the ground that there was no evidence of the actual existence or immediate probability of a nuisance, and in general an injunction is granted only when there is actual damage or imminent danger of damage. In Goldsmid v. Tunbridge Wells Commissioners (1866), L. R. 1 Ch. 349; 30 J. P. 419, the sewage of a town had for many years been drained by commissioners acting under a local Act into a stream passing through the plaintiff's land which was beyond their district, without perceptibly polluting it. But for some years before the filing of the bill, in consequence of the increase of the town, the stream became perceptibly polluted, and continued to increase in impurity. The court granted an injunction. They held on the facts that no prescriptive right had been gained, but that assuming that such right could be acquired of draining the sewage into the stream to the injury of the plaintiff, it could only be acquired by the continuance of a perceptible amount of injury for twenty years. They further held that although the fact of prospective nuisance is not in itself a ground for the interference of the court, yet if some degree of present nuisance exists the court will take into account its probable continuance and increase. Upon the subject of prescriptive right, TURNER, L.J., said: "I assume, but without giving any opinion on the point, that such a right might well be acquired, but then I think that it could be acquired only by a continuance of the discharge of sewage prejudicially affecting the estate, at least to some extent, for the period of twenty years." In Fielden v. Blackburn Corporation, W. N. (1866), p. 256, the plaintiff was tenant for life of an estate through which the river Darwen flowed. Three miles above his land the defendants caused the sewage of Blackburn to be discharged into a tributary of the Darwen, causing the stream to be polluted. The court granted an injunction. A canal company was authorised by statute to draw water from a beck for their canal. The water in the beck became polluted by the reception of drainage, and the canal consequently became very offensive. The company were indicted for a nuisance and convicted (see 6 B. & S. 631). Wood, V.-C., granted an injunction to restrain them from continuing to draw polluted water from the beck (Att.-Gen. v. Proprietors of the Bradford Canal (1866), L. R. 2 Eq. 71). In Att.-Gen. v. Richmond (1866), L. R. 2 Eq. 306; 30 J. P. 708, the defendants were a highway board, and were the local authority for executing the Nuisances Removal Acts. The court restrained them from allowing any fresh communications to be made with a sewer constructed by their predecessors in office, which occasioned a nuisance to the inhabitants of the adjoining parish by draining into a stream flowing through such parish, although from the limited nature of their powers no order could be made against the board which would have the effect of compelling them to abate the nuisance altogether by stopping up the sewer and ceasing to drain into the stream. Crossley v. Lightowler (1867), L. R. 2 Ch. 478, was an action between riparian owners, in which several important points were decided. It was held that where a prescriptive right to foul a stream has been acquired, the fouling must not be considerably enlarged to the damage of other people. The fact that a stream is fouled by others is not a defence to a suit to restrain the fouling by one. The mere suspension of the exercise of a prescriptive right is not sufficient to destroy the right without some evidence of an intention to abandon it; but where dye-works had not been used for more than twenty years, and had been allowed to go to ruin, it was held that any right of fouling a stream attached to them was lost. The owner of land on the banks of a river can maintain a suit to restrain the fouling of the water of the river without showing that the fouling is actually injurious to him. C. wishing to prevent the water of a river from being fouled by some dye-works, purchased from the owners of the dye-works a piece of land on the banks of the river without communicating to them his object. It was held that in the absence of any express reservation by the owners of the dye-works of the right of fouling, C. could maintain a suit to restrain it. In Lillywhite v. Trimmer (1867), 36 L. J. Ch. 525, the plaintiff was the owner of premises on the river Wey, below the town of Alton, the local board of which caused the sewage of the town to pass into the river about a mile and a half above his premises. The plaintiff sought to restrain the board from so doing, alleging that he and his family suffered materially in health and otherwise by the nauseous odours created by the sewage, and that the water of the river, which prior to the construction of the sewage works was a pure stream, had been rendered totally unfit for agricultural and domestic purposes. MALINS, V.-C., held that upon the balance of the evidence there was no case for an injunction. He laid down as a settled rule of law that where a work, though of great public importance, can only be effected by interfering with private rights, the private rights must prevail, and the public work must be carried out as best it can without such interference (following Att.-Gen. v. Birmingham, p. 61, ante); but where a great public object is to be attained, such as the drainage of a town, the court should not unnecessarily put any difficulty in the way of carrying it into effect. He held further that in considering questions of nuisance the court must have regard to the extent of the nuisance and to the balance of convenience, and if the extent of the inconvenience sustained is trifling, and such as may readily be compensated by money, the right of parties creating the nuisance must not be interfered with when the object which they seek to attain is of considerable importance, and that the court should not interfere by injunction to prevent a nuisance in cases where the injury was temporary and trifling, though it ought to do so in cases where it was permanent and serious. In Att.-Gen. v. Colney Hatch Lunatic Asylum (1868), L. R. 4 Ch. 146; 33 J. P. 196, it was held that when a plaintiff had proved his right to an injunction against a nuisance, it was no part of the duty of the court to inquire in what way the defendant could best remove it. The plaintiff is entitled to an injunction at once, unless the removal of the injury is physically impossible ; and it is the duty of the defendant to find his own way out of the difficulty, whatever inconvenience or expense it may put him to. But when the difficulty of removing the nuisance is great, the court will suspend the operation of the injunction for a time, with liberty to the defendant to apply for an extension of time. An information was filed at the relation of a local board, praying for an injunction to restrain the visiting justices of a county lunatic asylum from allowing the sewage from the asylum to pollute a certain stream. The fact of the pollution being attributable in part to the sewage of the asylum being proved, the court granted an injunction, but suspended its operation for three months to enable the defendants to make the necessary arrangements, with liberty to apply for an extension of time. The court expressed an opinion that if a public body, which had powers given to it by statute for the performance of a particular object, exercised its powers so as to injure the property of others, it was responsible for the injury, unless the act done was absolutely necessary for the performance of the object of the statute ; and that it was no answer to an information at the relation of a local board to abate a nuisance arising from sewage, that the board had power itself to remedy the evil by making sewers, for it was the duty of the board to prevent a nuisance arising in its district, instead of putting the ratepayers to the expense of additional works. A local Act for the improvement of Leeds incorporated the clauses of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, as to making and maintaining public sewers and the drainage of houses, except in so far as they were inconsistent with it, or expressly varied or excepted. By the local Act the corporation were authorised to construct main sewers to receive the sewage of the town and to convey it into the Aire. It was held that the power to drain into the river was controlled by s. 107 of the Act of 1847, which forbade the commission of a nuisance ; that though the river was polluted before it received the drainage of Leeds, the landowners on the banks were entitled to restrain the further pollution ; and that though the sewers had been completed and in operation for sixteen years before proceedings were taken, the court would interfere at the suit of the landowners (Att.-Gen. v. Corporation of Leeds (1870), L. R. 5 Ch. 583 ; 34 J. P. 708). In Att.-Gen. v. Gee (1870), L. R. 10 Eq. 131 ; 34 J. P. 596, a bill and information filed to restrain a local board from discharging sewage into a river, were dismissed with costs on the ground that the injury proved was trifling, MALINS, V.-C., following his previous judgment in Lillywhite v. Trimmer, supra. In North Staff. Rail. Co. v. Tunstall (1870), 39 L. J. Ch. 131, the council of a borough acting as a local board constructed a sewage system, which resulted in a gradually increasing nuisance to the plaintiffs and the public generally. It being represented on their behalf that the evil could only be dealt with effectually by a comprehensive scheme, and that no such scheme could prudently be adopted pending a parliamentary inquiry into the whole subject, the court granted an immediate injunction against any extension of the system, and restrained the continuance of the existing nuisance from and after the expiration of one year from the filing of the bill. In Holt v. Corporation of Rochdale (1870), L. R. 10 Eq. 354 ; 35 J. P. 6, a local Act provided that the corporation should not cause any new sewer to open or drain into the river Roche above a weir. They had enlarged and deepened an old sewer, and an injunction was granted to restrain them from causing or permitting any sewer to be opened into the new sewer, or any other new sewer to open or drain into the river above the weir. From this and other cases already mentioned where authority has been given to discharge sewage into streams, it will be seen that it is necessary to enquire whether the local Act giving such authority does not incorporate the provisions of this or some other Act, from which it must be inferred that the discharge contemplated was to be such as would not cause the pollution of the streams. In the absence of some such provisions, however, the Act may give a positive authority to discharge sewage into a stream, and the effect of such a statutory authority is illustrated in the case of Lea Conservancy Board v. Mayor, etc. of Hertford (1884), 48 J. P. 628 ; 1 C. & E. 299. In that case the town of Hertford had long drained into the river Lea, and a company obtained a local Act to make a sewer, intercept and purify the sewage, and then discharge the effluent into the river, all the inhabitants being at the same time prohibited from draining direct into the river. The Act provided that the company should not discharge sewage water into the Lea until after being purified by the best known process. It was held that the statutory provision superseded all common law rights; that the company were entitled to discharge the effluent water purified by the best process; and that no action lay against the company for polluting the river, though that process was still imperfect. For another case in which it was held on different grounds that a corporation had a legal right to send sewage into a tidal river, see Somersetshire Drainage Commissioners v. Bridgwater (Mayor, etc. of) (1898), 81 L. T. 729.

In Att.-Gen. v. Cockermouth L. B. (1874), L. R. 18 Eq. 172; 38 J. P. 660, an injunction was granted against a local board for polluting a river on the information of the Attorney-General without proof of injury to the public, the pollution of the river being a transgression of powers conferred by statute; but a bill filed by a local board, whose waterworks were supplied from the river eight miles further down, was dismissed with costs in the absence of proof of nuisance. Where there is a breach of an express statutory provision, the Attorney-General may obtain an injunction without proof of damage or injury to the public. See also Att.-Gen. v. Willesden U. D. C. (1896), 12 T. L. R. 528; Att.-Gen. v. Dorchester Corporation (1906), 70 J. P. 281; 94 L. T. 682. But he is not entitled on proving his case to an injunction as a matter of right; see per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., in Att.-Gen. v. L. & N. W. Rail. Co., [1900] 1 Q. B. 78; 63 J. P. 772; per FARWELL, J., in Att.-Gen. v. Wimbledon House Estate Co., Ltd., [1904] 2 Ch. 34; 68 J. P. 341; and in Att.-Gen. v. West Gloucestershire Water Co., [1909] 2 Ch. 338; 73 J. P. 453; Att.-Gen. v. Birmingham, etc. Drainage Board, [1910] 1 Ch. 48; 74 J. P. 57; ibid., per Lord ROBSON, [1912] A. C. 788; 76 J. P. 481. P. 421; Att.-Gen. v. Warren Smith (1912), 76 J. P. 253.

In Att.-Gen. v. Barnsley Corporation, W. N. (1874), p. 37, JAMES, L.J., said there could be no prescriptive right to create a public nuisance by fouling a river. (This is the general rule of law with regard to a public nuisance. See R. v. Cross (1812), 3 Camp. 224). For cases where a claim of a prescriptive right to drain sewage into the sea was discussed, see Foster v. Warblington U. D. C., and decisions cited therewith on p. 71, post. An injunction to restrain the pollution of the river Trent was granted in Att.-Gen. v. Tunstall L. B., W. N. (1875), p. 66. In the case of a public nuisance the Attorney-General is justified in taking proceedings at the relation of any person, whether residing near the nuisance or not, and whether interested in the property on which the nuisance exists or not. A public corporate body though not formed for the acquisition of gain and making no profit is liable to pay damages in respect of injury caused by its negligence. The Attorney-General and the owner of a canal filed an information and bill against a municipal corporation to restrain them from permitting sewage to be discharged into the canal, and for an inquiry as to damages. It was held that the Attorney-General was justified in taking proceedings at the relation of the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction and an inquiry as to damages, although he had permitted an obstruction to remain in the canal, whereby the sewage was prevented from being carried away by the flow of the water (Att.-Gen. v. Mayor, etc. of Basingstoke (1876), 24 W. R. 817). By the R. S. C., Order XXXVI., r. 58, where damages are to be assessed in respect of any continuing cause of action, they shall be assessed down to the date of assessment. The plaintiff brought an action against a rural sanitary authority for permitting sewage to fall into and pollute a stream running through his land, and obtained judgment for an injunction and damages. The defendants continued to pollute the stream, and three years after the judgment the chief clerk assessed the damages carrying the assessment down to the date of his certificate:—Held, that there was a continuing cause of action within the meaning of the rule, and that the damages had been rightly assessed (Hole v. Chard Union, [1894] 1 Ch. 293).

of damages, see Tatton v. Staffordshire Potteries Waterworks Co. (1879), 44 J. P. 106. As to when a quia timet action will lie to restrain an apprehended injury before actual damage has been done, see Fletcher v. Bealey (1885), 28 Ch. D. 688; Att.-Gen. v. Mayor, etc. of Manchester, [1893] 2 Ch. 87; 57 J. P. 343; Att.-Gen. v. Nottingham Corporation, [1904] 1 Ch. 673; 68 J. P. 125. As to the right of a reversioner to restrain pollution of a stream, see Jones v. Llanurwst U. D. C., p. 70, post.

In Blackburne v. Somers (1879), 5 L. R. Ir. 1, it was held that there can be no prescriptive right to pollute a stream by the discharge of sewage in such a manner and to such an extent as to be injurious to public health; that even assuming that a prescriptive right to foul a stream with sewage can be acquired, such right must be restricted to the limits of it when the period of prescription commenced; that if the pollution be substantially increased, whether gradually or suddenly, the court will interfere by injunction to restrain the illegal excess, and that if it be impossible to separate the excess from the legal user, the wrongdoer must bear the consequences of any restriction necessary to prevent the excess, even if it unavoidably extends to a total prohibition of the user. This decision was followed in Traill v. McAllister (1890), 25 L. R. Ir. 524. Cf., as to private right of drainage, Watson v. Troughton (1882), 47 J. P. 518; 48 L. T. 508.

A riparian owner is entitled to the use of the water of the stream in its pure and original condition; and if the water becomes fouled by the combined acts of proprietors higher up, he is entitled to proceed against each of them separately, and a defendant cannot escape on the plea that the damage done by him individually is inappreciable (Blair v. Deakin (1887), 52 J. P. 327; 57 L. T. 522). And see Nixon v. Tynemouth Union R. S. A. (1888), 52 J. P. 504. But in every case there must be some appreciable nuisance caused, either by the defendant alone, or by him with others (Ridge v. Midland Rail. Co. (1888), 53 J. P. 55).

From 1832 to 1877, the refuse of a fellmongery, and the washings of dyes used in a coloured rag manufactory, had been discharged into a watercourse. In 1878, the fellmongery was abandoned, and the manufacture of leather boards substituted at the same factory. The pollution caused by the discharge from the leather board manufactory was less than that caused by the fellmongery. The owners of the leather board factory were convicted under a local Act of polluting the stream:—Held, that the conviction must be confirmed, for even if the factory owners had a prescriptive right to foul the stream, it was as fellmongers, and not as leather board manufacturers; and that there was no authority for holding that the variation of the user, although it cast no increased, but even a less, burden on the servient tenement, enabled the factory owners to substitute a business of a totally different kind to that originally carried on by them, and at the same time to maintain their original prescriptive right to pollute the watercourse, even if such right did exist (Clarke v. Somersetshire Drainage Commissioners (1888), 57 L. J. M. C. 96; 52 J. P. 308 n).

An important distinction has been drawn between cases where a nuisance has been created or increased by acts of the local authority and where it exists independently of their acts, though they may have neglected to provide a proper system of sewage. In Glossop v. Heston and Isleworth L. B. (1879), 12 Ch. D. 102; 44 J. P. 36, the defendants were a local board constituted in November, 1875, under the P. H. A., 1875. The plaintiff complained that for some time before and since the defendants became the sanitary authority, sewage was allowed to fall into a stream passing near his residence so as to pollute it and cause a nuisance to him. It was held that, assuming an actionable nuisance to exist, the defendants were not liable in an action for an injunction and damages, as they had themselves done no act to create or increase the nuisance. And it was laid down that a local board acting under the P. H. A., 1875, causing a nuisance by any act which independently of the statute would have given a cause of action to any person, may be made liable in damages, or be restrained by injunction, unless they can show a justification under the powers of the statute. But if they do not act themselves so as to cause a nuisance, but neglect to perform their duty of providing a satisfactory system of drainage, it is no ground of action by an individual for damages or an injunction. (As to the remedy for a neglect of duty, see notes to

s. 15, ante, p. 49.) This decision was followed in Att.-Gen. v. Guardians of Dorking Union (1882), 20 Ch. D. 595. In that case an old sewer discharged into a stream, and a number of persons had acquired prescriptive rights to send their sewage into it. In addition there were others who from time to time sent their sewage into the sewer, so that the total amount of sewage gradually increased. The local board had done nothing in respect of this sewer; but had endeavoured, though without success, to find means for disposing of the sewage of their district. It was held that as the local board had not themselves constructed the sewer, but had only permitted it to be used as formerly by the inhabitants, they were not doing any act which could be restrained under the Public Health Act or the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876. (But see now the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1893, post, p. 1882, and West Riding C. C. v. Holmfirth U. S. A., [1894] 2 Q. B. 842; 59 J. P. 213, where it was held that the grounds upon which the foregoing cases were decided did not apply to the proceedings under the Rivers Pollution Prevention Acts.) Had it appeared in the Dorking Case that the defendants were neglecting their duty in providing a sufficient sanitary scheme for their district, an aggrieved landowner would have had his remedy under s. 299. See also Att.-Gen. v. Acton L. B. (1882), 22 Ch. D. 221. In Ogilvie v. Blything Union R. S. A. (1892), 67 L. T. 18, an action was brought against the authority to restrain the pollution of a ditch running through the main street of a town past the plaintiff's land into the sea. The ditch was covered over as it passed through the town, but was afterwards an open stream, and had been for many years seriously polluted. In 1877, the attention of the defendants was called to the condition of the houses in two new streets, and they required the owners to improve the drains. The owners accordingly ran two drains down the two streets and made communications with the main sewer. These drains were made for the purpose of carrying off surface water, and were not connected with any privies, but in addition to the surface water the slops of the houses were allowed to be thrown down the drains. In 1885, in consequence of a complaint, notices were served upon the occupiers to divert all polluting matter from the sewer, and the inspector of nuisances was ordered to inspect all drains entering the main sewer. The notices so served were all effective in causing an abatement of the nuisance except four. Subsequent directions of the defendants as to cleansing the sewer were duly carried out, the effect of which was to diminish the pollution of it to some extent. It was held that the defendants had been diligent, and had done all they could to abate the nuisance; that it was almost inevitable that some prescriptive rights of drainage should have been acquired, with which the defendants had no authority to interfere; that the defendants had no right physically to disconnect the drains; and that the action could not be maintained. But where by agreement with a local board, a person was allowed to insert a pipe from his house in order to carry away rain water into a brook, but afterwards without leave of the board he sent sewage through the pipe, an injunction was granted against the board on the ground that they had power to stop the drain from being used except according to the agreement, and could do so without causing inconvenience to other persons (Charles v. Finchley L. B. (1883), 23 Ch. D. 767; 47 J. P. 791). A detached portion of the parish of C. had no separate drainage system, but certain houses therein were drained by means of pipes carrying the sewage into cesspools, the overflow pipes from which communicated with main pipes within such detached portion. The drainage of the houses, including such communications, was constructed with the sanction of the C. vestry, as the local authority under the Metropolis Management Act, 1855. The main pipes communicated with watercourses within the adjoining district of the F. local board, and the sewage from the cesspools passing through the main pipes into the watercourses caused a nuisance. The F. board brought an information and action (to which the owners and occupiers of the houses were not parties) against the C. vestry, for an injunction to restrain them from permitting, authorising, or directing, any sewage to pass from the detached portion of C. into the watercourses, so as to cause a nuisance:—Held (a), following the opinions expressed in Att.-Gen. v. Guardians of Dorking Union, Att.-Gen. v. Acton L. B., and Charles v. Finchley L. B., supra, that the C. vestry could not stop up the communications which they had sanctioned:—Held (b), that inasmuch as the cesspools and drains were acting properly qua cesspools and drains, no proceedings could be successfully taken by the C. vestry against the owners or occupiers of the houses, under s. 85 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855; and that, as the nuisance and its cause were not both within C., it was doubtful whether proceedings could be taken by the C. vestry against the owners or occupiers of the houses under the Nuisances Removal Act, 1855:—Held (c), that, assuming the C. vestry could take proceedings, under the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, or the Nuisances Removal Act, 1855, Att.-Gen. v. Guardians of Dorking Union, supra, was an authority that the vestry could not be compelled by injunction to take such proceedings:—Held (d), on the authority of Glossop v. Heston and Isleworth L. B., supra, that it was not ground for an injunction that the C. vestry were not exercising or performing their other statutory powers and duties:—Held, therefore, on the C. vestry undertaking not to sanction further communications between houses within the detached portion of their parish and the main pipes therein until further order, or without the consent of the F. board, that the claim for an injunction failed (Att.-Gen. v. Clerkenwell Vestry, [1891] 3 Ch. 527). These cases were followed in Brown v. Dunstable (Mayor, etc. of), [1899] 2 Ch. 378; 63 J. P. 519, which was an action by a landowner for an injunction to restrain a corporation from discharging or allowing to be discharged sewage upon his lands from the sewers vested in them, so as to cause a nuisance. The defendants set up a prescriptive right, based on the assumption of a lost grant by the plaintiff's predecessors in title to trustees for the benefit of the inhabitants of the borough, to drain all sewage from any tenements built or to be built within the borough, and to discharge the same on the plaintiff's lands. This claim of right failed. It was proved, however, that there were a number of houses in the borough in respect of which prescriptive rights had been acquired to pass sewage into and along the sewers, and that there were other houses, the connections of which with the sewers had been made with the consent or by the acquiescence of the defendants. It was held that an injunction could not be granted so as to interfere with the prescriptive rights which had been acquired, nor to oblige the defendants to stop up the connections of the other houses which they had sanctioned, but that an injunction must be granted to restrain the defendants from authorising or directing any sewage to flow or be discharged on to the plaintiff's lands from sewers vested in them as the sanitary authority. "Glossop v. Heston and Isleworth L. B., supra, only shows that if the complaint be that the local authority have insufficiently carried out the duties imposed upon them by the statute, no action will lie; but it does not show that where a local authority in the course of their work create a nuisance, no action will lie against them. On the contrary, the judgment in that case is that if a legal wrong has been done, an action will lie, unless the legal wrong has been justified by the statute" (per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, J., in Dent v. Bournemouth (Mayor, etc. of) (1897), 66 L. J. Q. B. 395).

When a local authority have not merely used a sewer acquired from their predecessors, but have made additional sewers or have diverted into an old sewer sewage which formerly took a different course, the court may award damages in respect of pollution caused thereby, for the authority in those circumstances cannot say that they have merely succeeded to a defective system of drainage constructed by their predecessors, and have simply permitted the previous user of the sewer to continue, without themselves doing anything, so as to bring themselves within the decisions in Att.-Gen. v. Guardians of Dorking, supra, and Glossop v. Heston and Isleworth L. B., supra. See Foster v. Warblington U. D. C., infra.

An authority have only a qualified property in the sewers within their district, and cannot prevent persons, who have acquired a prescriptive right to use them, from so doing unless they provide other sewers equally effectual. Where a local board had not themselves constructed sewers which were a nuisance, but only permitted them to be used by inhabitants who had acquired a prescriptive right to use them, it was held that the local board did not "cause or suffer" sewage to flow into the Thames within the meaning of s. 64 of the Thames Navigation Act, 1866 (R. v. Staines L. B. (1889), 53 J. P. 358; 60 L. T. 261). Under similar words in the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894, it was held that a corporation were liable in respect of sewage turned into an old sewer by them from their modern municipal buildings, but not in respect of house drains which they had allowed to be connected with the sewer (Thames Conservators v. Gravesend Corporation, [1910] 1 K. B. 442; 73 J. P. 381; cf. High Wycombe Corporation v. Thames Conservators (1898), 78 L. T. 463). So too, where an individual had laid sewers and constructed sewage works for his building estate, it was held that the authority, who had taken no part in the construction or management of such sewers or works, could not be said (although the sewers were legally vested in them) to "cause or suffer" a noxious effluent from the works to flow into a river (Waltham Holy Cross U. D. C. v. Lea Conservancy Board (1910), 74 J. P. 253; 103 L. T. 192). See, however, Rochford R. D. C. v. Port of London Authority, [1914] 2 K. B. 916, where R. v. Staines L. B. and other cases, supra, were questioned. In Titterton v. Kingsbury Collieries, Ltd. (1911), 75 J. P. 295; 104 L. T. 569, another case of privately managed disposal works, a riparian owner sued the persons in control of the works for the loss of cattle and other injury due to the effluent. It was held that he could do so even though the sewers, and perhaps the works, were vested in the authority. For recent cases in which authorities have been made responsible for loss of or injury to cattle, reference may be made to Hague v. Doncaster R. D. C. (1908), 73 J. P. 69; 100 L. T. 121; Lawton v. Rawmarsh U. D. C. (1912), 76 J. P. N. 413; and Brown v. Brownhills U. D. C. (1913), Times, February 25th.

The decisions in Glossop v. Heston and Isleworth L. B., supra; Att.-Gen. v. Dorking Union, supra; R. v. Staines L. B., supra; Brown v. Dunstable Corporation, supra, were followed in Harrington (Earl of) v. Derby Corporation, [1905] 1 Ch. 205; 69 J. P. 62. The sewage of Derby had for many years been discharged into the river Derwent. Such sewage was conveyed (1) by sewers constructed many years ago into which householders had for more than twenty years discharged their sewage; (2) by sewers not laid by the corporation, but which became vested in them when they became the sanitary authority, into which householders had by virtue of their statutory rights made connections; and (3) by sewers laid by the corporation; or was (4) additional sewage arising from the conversion of privies into water-closets under directions given by the corporation. The plaintiff's castle and land was situated on the river some distance below the town, and the water of the river was used for feeding his lake. At the outfall from the lake was a water-wheel, from which power was obtained to pump water from an adjacent well to the castle. Owing to the pollution the supply to the lake had to be cut off, and the use of the water-wheel discontinued. The plaintiff claimed, firstly, an injunction to restrain the corporation from polluting the river in such a way as to prevent him from using the water for the purposes of his lake, and so as to be a nuisance to the castle and estate; secondly, a mandatory order to compel them to do certain works of cleansing and removal of foul matter from the plaintiff's lands; and, thirdly, damages for injuries done by the pollution. In 1898, in an action brought by the county council at the instigation of the plaintiff, an order was made in the Derbyshire County Court that the corporation should abstain from polluting the river contrary to the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876. The corporation, having in 1901 obtained the necessary powers, had since commenced to construct sewage works for the whole of their area. The court held—firstly (a) as to sewage passing through the sewers of the first and second classes, that persons had obtained prescriptive and statutory rights, and that an injunction could not be granted which would interfere with those rights, thus following the Dorking Case and the other cases above mentioned; (b) that to grant an injunction as to the remainder of the sewage was impracticable; and that, moreover, the county council having obtained their order and the corporation being now engaged in carrying out works in order to comply with it, an injunction was unnecessary. Secondly, that a mandatory order to do work on the plaintiff's land could not be granted, and that the proper remedy was in damages. Thirdly, (a) that an action for damages would not lie against the corporation for mere acts of non-feasance or neglect, the plaintiff's proper remedy being under s. 299 of the P. H. A., 1875; but (b) that they were liable in damages in respect of acts done by themselves. Fourthly, that the plaintiff could recover in respect of the cost of providing an engine and new water supply to his fields, and injury to his fishing and a house which he let, but not for loss of amenities of his castle, which he did not wish to let, nor for the silting up of the lake, for he ought to have excluded the polluted water earlier. Fifthly, that damages could be recovered for a period of six years, there being a "continuance of damage or injury" within the meaning of s. 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (cf. Hague v. Doncaster R. D. C., supra, on this point). The Derby Case was followed so far as refusal of an injunction on the ground of prescriptive rights is concerned in Foster v. Warblington U. D. C., p. 71, post; but it was distinguished by the same judge in Hobart v. Southend-on-Sea Corporation, p. 71, post, on the ground that there, although prescriptive rights of householders might exist, it did not appear that an injunction to restrain the defendants from committing a nuisance would result in any interference with the rights of the householders; that the defendants had not shown that, if proper control was maintained as regards the times at which the sewage was discharged they could not, without any interruption of the householder's rights, so discharge the sewage as not to commit a nuisance. See also Owen v. Faversham Corporation, infra.

In Jones v. Llanrwst U. D. C., [1911] 1 Ch. 393; 75 J. P. 68, the plaintiff complained that sewers belonging to the defendants discharged crude sewage into a river opposite to his land. He alleged that the sewage seriously polluted the water and thus infringed his riparian rights; and that faecal matter was deposited on the river bed and banks in such quantities as to occasion a serious nuisance, and that such deposit was a trespass on his land. The defendants contended that the river being a tidal one, the plaintiff had no riparian rights; that the Earl of A., having the undisputed right to licence fishing upon both sides of the river, was the true owner of its bed; that the plaintiff, who was a reversioner, could not sue for anything not injurious to the reversion without joining his tenant as co-plaintiff; that the plaintiff was not complaining of a private wrong, but was endeavouring to make the defendants perform a statutory duty; and that as the sewers were in their existing condition when taken over by the defendants' predecessors from the guardians, and as they had not themselves done anything to create a nuisance, they were not liable. It was held that a riparian owner on the banks of a natural stream is, whether owner or not of the river bed, entitled to the flow of the stream past his land in its natural state of purity; that the part of the river in question being only influenced by exceptional tides was not tidal; that the injury, being of a continuing nature, was injurious to the reversion (see also as to reversioners suing, White v. London General Omnibus Co., p. 171, post; that anyone who turns faecal matter, or allows such matter collected by him or under his control to escape into a river under such conditions that it is carried by the wind or current on to his neighbour's land is guilty of trespass; that the plaintiff's action was a bonâ fide complaint of a private injury, and that inasmuch as by statute and statutory orders the defendant council had succeeded to all "powers duties and liabilities" of the guardians, they were liable to the plaintiff for not disposing of their sewage in the same manner as the guardians would have been; and that, therefore, an injunction must be granted, its operation to be suspended for eighteen months. Reference should be made to this case for the latest discussion of the effect of prescriptive and statutory rights of drainage, and of the true effect of the decision in Glossop v. Heston and Isleworth L. B.

A bill filed in 1868 prayed an injunction to restrain a local board from causing or permitting any sewage to pass into a brook so as to be a nuisance. An answer was put in which did not in terms suggest any doubt as to the jurisdiction. In June, 1871, a motion was made for an injunction, and the court granted an interlocutory injunction in November, 1872. After various proceedings in February, 1889, a supplemental writ was issued by leave of the court, and a statement of claim was delivered asking for an injunction and also damages, including such as had been occasioned by the failure of the local board to comply with the interlocutory injunction. At the trial of the action, in July, 1890, KAY, J., decided that the defendants had practically abated the nuisance to such an extent that it would not be necessary to continue the injunction; but was of opinion that certain moneys ought to be paid by the defendants to the plaintiffs. Objection was, however, taken that the court had no jurisdiction; that the action and suit were improper; and that the only remedy was by mandamus:—Held, that if the objection might originally have prevailed, the defendants ought not to be allowed to raise it now ; and that the case must be dealt with as if they had deliberately waived any objection on this ground :—Held, also, applying the principle that, where there is jurisdiction to grant an injunction, damages may be given in lieu for injury, the injunction would not be continued ; but that there must be judgment against the defendants for the moneys found to be due from them at the trial (Warwick and Birmingham Canal Navigation Co. v. Burman (1890), 63 L. T. 670).

Note to
Section 17.

In Smith v. Smith (1875), L. R. 20 Eq. 500, JESSEL, M.R., pointed out that if a nuisance was proved to exist, the court would not hesitate to grant a mandatory injunction. The injunction in such a case was said by NORTH, J., in Taylor v. East Barnes Valley L. B. (1885), 1 T. L. R. 257, to be a matter of course. For the form of injunction, see Att.-Gen. v. Halifax (Mayor, etc. of) (1869), 39 L. J. Ch. 129 ; North Staff. Rail. Co. v. Tunstall, ante, p. 64, and Lingwood v. Stowmarket Paper Co. (1865), L. R. 1 Eq. 77.

An authority who are required by a Provisional Order (duly confirmed) to construct sewage works approved by the L. G. B., cannot rely on such order and approval as a defence to an action for causing a nuisance (Att.-Gen. v. Dorchester Corporation, p. 65, ante).

As to the admissibility of interrogatories in an action for pollution, see Rose v. Chesham U. D. C. (1913), 134 L. T. Jo. 591.

There is no common law right to discharge sewage into the sea, and a person whose oyster beds are injured by pollution can maintain an action (Hobart v. Southend-on-Sea Corporation (1906), 75 L. J. K. B. 705 ; 70 J. P. 192 ; Foster v. Warblington U. D. C., [1906] 1 K. B. 648 ; 70 J. P. 233 ; Owen v. Faversham Corporation (1908), 73 J. P. 33 ; Price's Patent Candle Co., Ltd. v. London C. C., p. 62, ante). See also the P. H. A., 1907, s. 12, post, p. 1102.

With regard to enforcing an injunction reference may be made to Att.-Gen. v. Mayor, etc. of Birmingham (1871), 24 L. T. 224. There the information was filed nine months before the hearing, but up to the hearing no steps had been taken to abate the nuisance. Under the circumstances the court refused to suspend the injunction for more than six months, with liberty for the defendants to apply for an extension if they could show that they had used due diligence in the meantime. An injunction was suspended for nearly a year in Att.-Gen. v. Willesden U. D. C. (1896), 12 T. L. R. 528.

In Spokes v. Banbury L. B. (1865), L. R. 1 Eq. 42 ; 30 J. P. 54, an injunction was granted to restrain the pollution of a stream, and was suspended from March 6th to July 1st. The defendants did not obey, alleging that they had not yet discovered means of deodorising the sewage, and that compliance was practically impossible without stopping the drainage of the town. It was held that there had been gross and wilful contempt, and a sequestration was ordered to issue, which order was affirmed on appeal (13 L. T. 453). A motion for a sequestration against a local board will be granted of course, but not an application to commit the members personally (Sutton v. Barnet L. B., W. N. (1877), p. 167 ; and see Att.-Gen. v. Walthamstow, W. N. (1878), p. 90). An injunction to restrain the defendants from polluting a stream was granted in January, 1885, with a suspension for three months which the court in April refused to extend ; on motion by the plaintiff, under R. S. C., Order XLII., r. 31, for sequestration, it was held that Order XLI., r. 5, requiring service of a copy of the order, etc. did not apply ; and that notwithstanding Order XLIII., r. 16, the plaintiff was proceeding regularly in applying for leave to issue sequestration (Selous v. Croydon L. B. (1885), 53 L. T. 209). It was said in one case that there might be a wilful default within the meaning of Order XLII., r. 31, though there had not been an obstinate refusal to obey the order (Att.-Gen. v. Walthamstow L. B. (1895), 11 T. L. R. 533). But in a later case it was laid down that where the court is satisfied that the disobedience is not intentional or reckless, but merely casual or accidental and committed under circumstances which negative any suggestion of contumacy, while it may visit the offending party with costs, and may order an inquiry as to damages, it will not take the extreme course of issuing an order either of commitment or of sequestration. To justify so serious a proceeding the court must be satisfied that a contempt of court has been committed—in other words, that its order has been contumaciously disregarded (Fairclough v. Manchester Ship Canal Co., W. N. (1897), p. 7). Cf. also Marsden & Sons, Ltd. v. Old Silkstone Collieries, Ltd. (1914), 78 J. P. N. 220; and see Rantzen v. Rothschild (1865), 30 J. P. 85; 13 L. T. 399, and Stancomb v. Trowbridge U. D. C., [1910] 2 Ch. 190; 74 J. P. 210, as to the responsibility of a local authority in such cases for acts done by their servants through carelessness, or in actual dereliction of duty.

An action was brought against an authority to restrain them from polluting a stream, and in July, 1901, a perpetual injunction was granted. In July, 1902, the plaintiff moved for liberty to sue out a writ of sequestration for an alleged contempt in wilfully disobeying the injunction. On the hearing of the motion an engineer was directed to report as to what, if anything, ought to be done to deal efficiently with the sewage. He reported in November, 1902, and the plaintiff thereupon submitted that the report showed that the defendants were in contempt. An order for sequestration was made, but the writ was ordered to lie in the office for six months on the defendants undertaking to carry out the works recommended in the engineer's report, and the defendants were ordered to pay the costs of and incidental to the motion, including the plaintiff's expert's fee and the engineer's fees for his report and supervision (Lee v. Aylesbury U. D. C. (1902), 19 T. L. R. 106). See also Lord Gifford v. Chichester Corporation (1902), 24 M. C. C. 252; (1903), 25 M. C. C. 453; Earp v. Brownhill U. D. C. (1913), Times, March 14th.

For cases where the time has been extended, see Wood v. Harrogate (Commissioners of), W. N. (1874), p. 225; Taylor v. Friern Barnet L. B., W. N. (1885), p. 7; Att.-Gen. v. Finchley L. B. (1887), 3 T. L. R. 356.

Jurisdiction
of county

An injunction to restrain a nuisance may be granted by a county court in an action within its jurisdiction, and may be enforced by attachment (Martin v. Barnister (1879), 4 Q. B. D. 491; and see Richards v. Cullerne (1881), 7 Q. B. D. 623).

Injunction where nuisance

If before the issue of the writ and the trial, the defendants cease to commit the nuisance, an injunction will not ordinarily be granted, but the court has discretion to grant one (Chester (Dean and Chapter) v. Smelting Corporation, Ltd. (1901), 85 L. T. 67; Carr & Co. v. Bath Gas Light and Coke Co., [1900] W. N. 265). See also Att.-Gen. v. Squires & Sons (1906), 70 J. P. N. 545, and Att.-Gen. v. Keymer Brick Co. (1903), 67 J. P. 434; 1 L. G. R. 654, and cf. p. 205, post.

When an injunction has been granted, but works are promptly carried out for the effectual prevention of the nuisance complained of, and are satisfactorily completed before an appeal from the original decision comes on, the appellate court, though agreeing with the decision, will generally accept an undertaking by the defendants and discharge the injunction (cf. Price's Candle Co., Ltd. v. London C. C. (1911), 75 J. P. 329; 9 L. G. R. 660); but the undertaking should be an unqualified one, and not merely "to use their best endeavours" to prevent, etc. (Att.-Gen. v. Birmingham, etc. Drainage Board, [1912] A. C. 788; 76 J. P. 481).

predecessors.

As to the liability of a local board in respect of a decree against their predecessors, see Att.-Gen. v. Mayor, etc. of Birmingham, p. 61, ante; Taylor v. Friern Barnet L. B., supra, and note (b) to s. 12, p. 26, ante.

indictment.

"When statutory powers are conferred under circumstances in which they may be exercised with a result not causing any nuisance, and new and unforeseen circumstances arise which render the exercise of them impossible without causing one, and so contravening the law of the land, the persons exercising them are liable to indictment" (per COCKBURN, C.J., in R. v. Bradford Navigation Co. (1865), 6 B. & S., at p. 648). This principle would seem to be applicable to cases, like some of those already mentioned, where power is given by local Acts to drain into a public river and a nuisance afterwards results from the altered circumstances of the district or new or more extensive operations or manufacture carried on therein.

With reference to the pollution of streams by sewage, see also the Rivers Pollution Prevention Acts, 1876 and 1893, and the Alkali, etc. Works Regulation Act, 1906, in App. I., post.

Diversion of

The cases already cited in this note have reference to complaints made against a local authority for polluting streams, and thus interfering with the rights of persons or the public. In other cases questions have arisen as to the right of an authority to intercept the supply of water, questions such as have been the subject of discussion in all times, namely, as to the rights of individuals in running streams, pools, or ponds. A full discussion of the law applicable to these rights cannot be entered upon here. A sanitary authority have sometimes been placed in the position of a private individual disputing as to his right to enjoy or to divert a flowing stream, to intercept it for irrigation or other purposes, as or as against a riparian owner, to pollute or prevent the pollution of the water, or lastly to drain or restrain the drainage of underground or percolating streams. In one important case which was taken from the Court of Exchequer to the Exchequer Chamber, and ultimately to the House of Lords, the right of a local board to drain by means of their wells the underground water from the soil of a neighbouring landowner was established (Chasemore v. Richards (1857), 7 H. L. Cas. 349). In the elaborate judgments pronounced by CRESSWELL, J., and COLERIDGE, J., who dissented from the rest of the court, will be found an elegant exposition of much of the legal doctrine applicable to this important subject of property. The decision has been followed in New River Co. v. Johnson (1860), 29 L. J. M. C. 93; 24 J. P. 244; R. v. Metropolitan Board of Works (1863), 3 B. & S. 710; Ewart v. Belfast Poor Law Guardians (1881), 9 L. R. Ir. 172; and Black v. Ballymena (1886), 17 L. R. Ir. 459. See also Bradford (Mayor of) v. Pickles, [1895] A. C. 587; 60 J. P. 3; McNab v. Robertson, [1897] A. C. 129; 61 J. P. 468; Mostyn v. Atherton, [1899] 2 Ch. 360; Roberts v. Gwynfai R. D. C., [1899] 2 Ch. 608; 61 J. P. 52; Brain v. Marfell (1880), 44 J. P. 56; 41 L. Note to

Section 17.

An authority may not by an underground drain draw water directly from, and thus diminish the flow of, a surface stream (Grand Junction Canal Co. v. Shugar, (1871), L. R. 6 Ch. 483; 35 J. P. 660). If, however, the flow of a surface stream be diminished by a withdrawal of percolating underground water which indirectly affects the stream, no action will lie. A water board were owners of a well and pumping station situated near a natural stream. The well was lined with steel cylinders to a depth of seventy-six feet, and no water from the adjacent soil could get into it above the bottom of the lining. The plaintiff was a riparian owner lower down the stream. The board by pumping water from the well reduced the general level of the water in the surrounding soil, in consequence of which some of the water flowing in the stream leaked out through its bed and sides, and the volume of water in the stream which reached the plaintiff's property was diminished. None of the water which so escaped from the stream ever got into the well. The board were held not liable (English v. Metropolitan Water Board, [1907] 1 K. B. 588; 71 J. P. 313). Nor may an authority interfere with underground water which flows in a defined channel, the existence and course of which are known (Bradford Corporation v. Ferrand (No. 2), [1902] 2 Ch. 655; 67 J. P. 21). If an action be brought to restrain alleged interference with underground water, the court will not give leave to a plaintiff who does not know that such water runs in any known channel, to enter on the defendant's land and search for a defined channel, unless there be prima facie evidence that there is such a channel (Bradford Corporation v. Ferrand (No. 1) (1902), 67 J. P. 21; 86 L. T. 497).

Where a canal company were empowered by their Act to supply their canal with water from all streams, brooks, and watercourses within one thousand yards of it, it was held that they had no ground of complaint against an authority who, having run a sewer under a road within that distance, made open gratings through which the rain and other surface water fell into the sewer (M. S. & L. Rail. Co. v. Workson Board of Health, ante, p. 61).

See also s. 327 (4), and s. 332, post, pp. 654, 658, as to the saving for water rights in this Act. No one has a right to use his own land in such a way as to be a nuisance to his neighbour; and therefore if a man puts filth or other poisonous matter on his land, he must take care that it does not escape so as to poison water which his neighbour has a right to use, although his neighbour may have no property in such water at the time when it is fouled. The plaintiff and defendant were adjoining landowners, and had each a deep well on his own land, the plaintiff's land being at a lower level than the defendant's. The defendant turned sewage into his well, and thus polluted the water that percolated underground from his land to the plaintiff's. Consequently the water which came into the plaintiff's well by percolation when he used his pump became adulterated with the sewage. The Court of Appeal held (reversing PEARSON, J.) that the plaintiff had a right of action against the defendant for so polluting his source of supply, although, until the plaintiff had appropriated it, he had no property in the percolating water under his land, and although he appropriated such water by the artificial means of pumping (Ballard v. Tomlinson (1885), 29 Ch. D. 115; 49 J. P. 692). The decision of PEARSON, J., had previously been dissented from by KAY, J., in Snow v. Whitehead (1884), 27 Ch. D. 588). But an injunction was refused to restrain a defendant from digging a well on the ground that by so doing he might reduce the supply to the plaintiff's well, and injure it by letting in brackish water (Tending Hundred Waterworks Co. v. Free, Rodwell & Co., Times, July 3rd, 1891).

As to the diversion of water from streams above ground, see notes to s. 51, post, p. 117.

Alteration and dis-
of sewers.

18. Any local authority may from time to time enlarge lessen alter the course of cover in (a) or otherwise improve any sewer belonging to them, and may discontinue close up or destroy any such sewer that has in their opinion become unnecessary, on condition (b) of providing a sewer as effectual for the use of any person who may be deprived in pursuance of this section of the lawful use of any sewer: Provided that the discontinuance closing up or destruction of any sewer shall be so done as not to create a nuisance (c).

A form of notice of intention to alter or discontinue a sewer will be found in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 514.

(a) These words were held to justify the piping of an open watercourse, which the court held to be a "sewer" (Wheatcroft v. Matlock L. B. (1885), 52 L. T. 356; cf. Att.-Gen. v. Hackney L. B., on p. 55, ante).

(b) These words appear to render it necessary for the authority to provide the new sewer in the first place. See Att.-Gen. v. Guardians of Dorking Union; Att.-Gen. v. Acton L. B., ante, p. 67. As to the alteration and substitution of sewers by persons other than the authority, see ss. 331, 333, post, pp. 658, 659. As to the duty to adapt or provide private drains when the public sewer is changed, see Marylebone Vestry v. Viret, and St. Martin's in-the-Fields (Vestry of) v. Ward, in notes to s. 23, post, p. 83. See also Finlinson v. Porter, p. 84, post, as to the right to alter an existing drain in order to suit the depth of the new sewer.

(c) In terms this proviso is limited to the discontinuance, closing up, or destruction of a sewer, and does not extend to its alteration; but see the next section. It would enable persons interested to apply to the Chancery Division for an injunction to stop works, while the authority could be indicted for any nuisance caused by their proceedings, if it were a public one. See R. v. Bradford Navigation Co. (1865), 29 J. P. 613; 6 B. & S. 631, 648.

Cleansing
sewers.

19. Every local authority shall cause the sewers belonging to them to be constructed covered ventilated and kept so as not to be a nuisance or injurious to health, and to be properly cleansed and emptied.

This section deals with the physical construction or condition of a sewer as such; it does not apply to a nuisance caused by a discharge of effluent from a sewer into a river (Harrington (Earl) v. Derby Corporation, [1905] 1 Ch. 205; 69 J. P. 62, as to which, see s. 17, ante, p. 59).

Ventilation.

The word "ventilated" was new. It has been suggested that the erection of a ventilating shaft attached to a private house is within the power of a local authocity, having regard to the use of this term and the language of the Lords Justices in Swanston v. Twickenham L. B. (1879), 11 Ch. D. 838 ; 43 J. P. 380.

Section 19.

The duty imposed upon an authority by this section, unlike that created by s. 15, is not one in respect of which complaint may be made to the L. G. B. under s. 299, post, p. 629. An action for damages will therefore lie against an authority at the suit of an individual whose property has been injured by their negligent failure to perform such duty (Baron v. Portslade-by-Sea U. D. C., [1900] 2 Q. B. 588 ; 64 J. P. 675). It might have been otherwise had a penalty been imposed by the Act for default in the performance of the duty, as in Saunders v. Holborn District Board, [1895] 1 Q. B. 64 ; 59 J. P. 453 ; or St. Olave's District Board v. Southwark and Vauxhall Water Co. (1896), 18 M. C. C. 60.

The following cases may be referred to as examples of actions against local authorities for negligent breach of the duty imposed by this section. A sewer was so constructed that there was from time to time an overflow of sewage round a manhole, and on one occasion, not in time of flood, the overflow was so great that a large pool of sewage formed in a neighbouring field, the water in the plaintiff's well was contaminated, great discomfort to him was caused, several members of his family became ill, and ultimately he was obliged to leave his house, though he continued liable to pay rent for it. At the trial before RUSSELL, L.C.J., the plaintiff obtained damages for all these causes of complaint (Touzeau v. Slough U. D. C. (1896), 60 J. P. 103). Damages were also recovered for negligent construction in Whitfield v. Bishop Auckland U. D. C., p. 54, ante. An action under Lord Campbell's Act was brought on behalf of the widow and children of a man who had died of blood poisoning from sewer gas. The action was founded upon the negligence of the defendants in allowing a ventilation pipe from their sewer to communicate with the inside of the house. At the trial before COLLINS, J., the jury found for the plaintiffs (Smith v. King's Norton U. D. C. (1896), 60 J. P. 520). The decision in Dent v. Bournemouth (Mayor, etc. of), ante, p. 54, may have been based on the ground that the alleged cause of action amounted to a default to perform the duty imposed by this section. An action was brought against the defendants for negligently and improperly altering certain sewers near to the plaintiff's premises, thereby causing him serious illness. It was alleged that the sewer was not properly ventilated and that the plaintiff's illness arose from this defect. At the trial before DAY, J., the plaintiff recovered damages (Brown v. Whickham U. D. C., Times, July 14th, 1898). See also Russell v. Royston U. D. C. (1913), 77 J. P. N. 317. For a case where damages were recovered in respect of injury by sewer gas to men employed in cleansing, see Digby v. East Ham U. D. C. (1896), 13 T. L. R. 11, and on the new trial, Times, May 25th, 1897 ; and as to claims by workmen under the Workmen's Compensation Act, see Broderick v. London C. C., [1908] 2 K. B. 807 ; Eke v. Hart-Dyke, [1910] 2 K. B. 677 ; Finlay v. Tullamore Guardians (1914), 48 Ir. L. T. 110. See also upon this subject generally, the cases cited in notes to s. 15, ante, p. 49.

A local authority are, of course, liable for the negligence of their contractors in laying a sewer. See Hardaker v. Idle U. D. C., [1896] 1 Q. B. 335 ; 60 J. P. 196, and the cases cited in the note to s. 265.

A plaintiff alleging a breach of the duty imposed by this section must prove negligence. An authority are merely required to use reasonable skill and care to keep the sewers clean, and are only liable to actions at the suit of persons damaged when they have failed to do so (Hammond v. Vestry of St. Pancras (1874), L. R. 9 C. P. 316 ; 37 J. P. 456). This decision was followed by NORTH, J., in Bateman v. Poplar District Board of Works (No. 2) (1887), 37 Ch. D. 272. There it was held that the duty imposed by the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, s. 72 (which corresponds to the above section), to keep the sewers so as not to be a nuisance, is not an absolute duty, but only a duty to use all reasonable care and diligence. If, therefore, a drain has by reason of another drain being connected with it, become "a sewer," and, therefore, by the Act vested in the authority, they will not be liable for a nuisance caused thereby, if it is shown that the connection was made illegally without their knowledge, and that before action brought they did not know, and could not by the exercise of reasonable care have discovered, that the drain was a sewer. And see Hart v. St. Marylebone Borough Council (1912), 76 J. P. 257, and Ogilvie v. Blything Union (Guardians of) (1891),

Section 19.

65 L. T. 338 ; (1892), 67 L. T. 18, the facts of which are set out in the notes to s. 17, ante, p. 67. In Stretton's Derby Brewery Co. v. Mayor, etc. of Derby, [1894] 1 Ch. 431, the defendants had made a sewer in 1855. The system of drainage then adopted reasonably provided for the district, and for the then probable increase of buildings which would drain into it, and there had been no negligence in constructing or maintaining the sewer or in not providing a new sewer or sewage system. The plaintiffs many years after the making of the sewer erected a brewery abutting on the road and connected the drainage of the brewery cellars with the sewers. In 1891, 1892, and 1893, the cellars were damaged by floodings from the sewer arising from the fact that by reason of the increase in the number of buildings draining into the sewer, when very heavy falls of rain occurred, the sewer was too small to carry off the influx of water, and the pressure forced the sewage through the connections into the plaintiffs' cellars. It was held that the defendants were not liable either as strangers and apart from any statutory duty or (there being no evidence of negligence) under the present section of this Act. See further as to this case, the notes to s. 15, ante. The omission to place a flap or penstock at the mouth of a drain leading from a plaintiff's premises to a sewer, was held to be negligence in Ruck v. Williams (1858), 3 H. & N. 308. In Brown v. Sargent (1858), 1 F. & F. 112, ERLE, J., ruled that an authority were not bound to provide sewers capable of withstanding the pressure caused by extraordinary storms: cf. Meek v. Whitechapel Board of Works (1860), 2 F. & F. 144. See also Dixon v. Metropolitan Board of Works (1881), 7 Q. B. D. 418 ; 46 J. P. 4, and Whitehouse v. Birmingham Canal Co. (1857), 27 L. J. Ex. 25, as to opening floodgates to get rid of extraordinary storm water.

Owing to an escape of sewage from a sewer vested in an urban council, the supply of drinking water used by an adjacent hotel became polluted, and an outbreak of typhoid fever occurred. In an action by the proprietor against the council for damages for the pollution of the water supply, the jury found that the pollution was due to negligence on the part of the defendants, and that there was no contributory negligence, and awarded damages. The plaintiff had no proprietary title to the water coming to his hotel through the supply which was so polluted, nor any leave or licence to use the water. It was held that he was entitled to judgment on the findings (Fergusson v. Malvern U. D. C. (1908), 72 J. P. 101). The Court of Appeal inferred from the facts and the findings that the plaintiff was taking water which belonged to the defendants without any right to do so ; that the water was collected and polluted on the defendants' land ; that the defendants did not know that he was taking such water ; and that there was no evidence of any damage to him except that which was brought about by his own act in thus taking the water. They held that, under these circumstances, the plaintiff had not established any breach of duty on the part of the defendants towards him, and entered judgment for the defendants. See 72 J. P. 273. The House of Lords affirmed this decision (73 J. P. 361).

In Lambert v. Lowestoft Corporation, [1901] 1 K. B. 590 ; 65 J. P. 326, it was held that an action will not lie against an authority whose duty it is under this Act to maintain sewers, for damage occasioned by the subsidence of a highway due to the defective condition of a sewer and of the soil under the highway, unless there is negligence on the part of the authority. See also Boome v. Bromley R. D. C. (1905), 27 M. C. C. 481, where BIGHAM, J., directed a jury that in order to render the council liable it must be shown that in the discharge of their statutory duty they had acted negligently.

Liability of
undertakers.

In Blyth v. Birmingham Waterworks Co. (1856), 11 Ex. 781, the company were held not liable for the bursting of a pipe caused by a frost of extraordinary severity. And see Price v. South Metropolitan Gas Co. (1895), 65 L. J. Q. B. 126, as to a gas pipe fractured by operations of a third party. In Snook v. Grand Junction Waterworks Co., Ltd. (1886), 2 T. L. R. 308, it was held that a company incorporated by statute for the purpose of supplying water were, in the event of water escaping through a fracture in their main, protected from the doctrine established by Rylands v. Fletcher (1868), L. R. 3 H. L. 330 ; and that before damages can be obtained, it must be proved that the company were guilty of negligence which caused the accident. The Court of Appeal have since decided to the same effect in Green v. Chelsea Waterworks Co. (1894), 70 L. T. 547.

See generally as to the obligation to clean out cuts and channels imposed by provisions such as those contained in this Act, Geuldis v. Bann Reservoir (Proprietors of) (1878), 3 App. Cas. 430; Bligh v. Rathangan River Drainage District Board, [1898] 2 I. R. 205.

Note to
Section 19.

With reference to the foregoing cases, it must however be remembered that a special Act may expressly preserve the undertakers' liability in respect of a nuisance: see Midwood v. Manchester Corporation, [1905] 2 K. B. 307; 69 J. P. 348 (escape of electricity); and Charing Cross, etc. Co. v. London Hydraulic Power Co. (1914), 30 T. L. R. 441 (escape of water under high pressure), where undertakers were held liable as for a nuisance (apart from any question of negligence).

As to the liability of the occupier of premises for an escape of water into adjoining premises, see Snow v. Whitehead (1884), 27 Ch. D. 588; Sutton v. Chard, W. N. (1886), p. 120; Gill v. Edouin (1894), 71 L. T. 762; Prinsep v. Belgravia Estate, Limited (1895), 98 L. T. Newsp. 590; Gill v. Edouin (1895), 72 L. T. 579; Blake v. Woolf, [1898] 2 Q. B. 426; 62 J. P. 659.

As to the liability of an owner or occupier for the escape of sewage from a defective drain, see Humphries v. Cousins (1877), 2 C. P. D. 239; 41 J. P. 280; Holland v. Lazarus (1897), 66 L. J. Q. B. 285; 61 J. P. 262.

As to the liability of a local authority for accidents caused by plates or coverings placed on the highway for the protection of or as parts of sewers laid under the highway, see cases cited in the notes to ss. 66 and 144, post, pp. 140, 251.

20. An urban authority (a) may, if they think fit, provide a map exhibiting a system of sewerage for effectually draining their district, and any such map shall be kept at their office, and shall at all reasonable times be open to the inspection of the ratepayers of their district.

(a) This power is confined to an urban authority, though it is obtainable by a rural authority by means of an order under s. 276.

The Public Health (Support of Sewers) Act, 1883, s. 3, post, p. 716, requires all authorities to make a map of all their sanitary works. Under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 39, s. 10, maps or plans of parishes may be made for the purposes of assessment committees.

21. The owner (a) or occupier of any premises within (b) the district of a local authority shall be entitled to cause his drains (c) to empty into the sewers of that authority on condition (d) of his giving such notice as may be required by that authority of his intention so to do, and of complying with the regulations of that authority in respect of the mode in which the communications between such drains and sewers are to be made, and subject to the control of any person who may be appointed by that authority to superintend the making of such communications.

owners and occupiers
district to drain into sewers of
authority.

Any person causing a drain to empty into a sewer of a local authority without complying with the provisions of this section shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds (e), and the local authority may close any communication between a drain and sewer made in contravention of this section and may recover in a summary manner (e) from the person so offending any expenses incurred by them under this section.

A form of notice for use under this section will be found in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 514. See also Suggested Regulations, at p. 515.

(a) See the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 8.

(b) As to the powers of owners and occupiers without the district, see next section. Apparently when a house outside the district drains into a cesspool within the district, the sewage in such cesspool is not "foreign" sewage, and the overflow pipe may be connected to the sewers of the district under this section. See per COZENS-HARDY, M.R., and FARWELL, L.J., in East Barnet Valley U. D. C. v. Stallard, p. 81, post.

(c) See the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 24. This section is confined to drains. The P. H. A., 1848, s. 47, included sewers. The application of this section will be limited if s. 38 of the P. H. A., 1907, has been applied by an Order of the L. G. B. By that section "before any drain existing at the commencement of this section and then not communicating with any sewer of the local authority shall be made to communicate with any sewer of the local authority, the local authority may require the same to be laid open for examination by the surveyor, and no such communication shall be made until the surveyor shall certify that such drain may be properly made to communicate with such sewer."

Where there is an existing connection with a sewer the owner is not entitled to break up the surface of a footway vested in the local authority for the purpose of constructing therein an inspection chamber in the drain, but, semble, an inspection chamber might be so put in when a connection is first made (Att.-Gen. v. Ashby (1907), 71 J. P. 387; 97 L. T. 479). An appeal was dismissed by consent upon terms not stated in court: see 72 J. P. 449.

Compliance with regulations.

(d) Hence the notice must be given and the owner must ascertain what are the regulations applicable before he commences to make his communication. The word used is regulations, not byelaws; therefore, the regulations are at the entire discretion of the local authority, but they must relate to the "mode of making" communications, and must not absolutely prohibit communications (Brown v. Dunstable Corporation, p. 68, ante). The regulations contemplated appear to be general regulations, applicable to all cases in the district. See s. 188, post, p. 446. If s. 38 of the Act of 1907 (see note (c), supra) has been applied by the L. G. B., an old drain, as defined in the section, may be required to be laid open for examination, and the section requires as a condition precedent a certificate by the surveyor that it may be properly made to communicate. A person's right under this section to connect his drain with a sewer does not justify him in trespassing on intervening land not owned by him and laying his drain therein; nor can the authority justify doing so in order to bring his drain up to their sewer (Wood v. Ealing Tenants, Ltd., [1907] 2 K. B. 390; 71 J. P. 456; see also note (f) to s. 23, post, p. 84). But some local Acts empower an authority to lay drains in private streets; and apart from such a clause, an authority may be able to assist an owner by laying a new "sewer" across the intervening land under s. 16. In Russell v. Knight (1894), Times, May 9th, the plaintiff, as owner of the soil of a road, brought an action against the owner of adjoining land for trespass in having unlawfully constructed in the soil of the road a drain communicating with a sewer in the road, and having unlawfully caused sewage matter to be passed through the soil of the road and through the drain and sewer. There was also a complaint that the sewage created a nuisance at the outfall of the sewer on the plaintiff's property. The sewer was a brick watercourse which was formed by a common predecessor in title for the purpose of carrying away water that had accumulated in gravel pits. One defence raised was that the sewer was vested in the local authority and not in the plaintiff; but it did not appear that the defendant or his predecessor in title at any time gave notice to the authority of an intention to drain into the sewer. BRUCE, J., held that the sewer was not a sewer made for profit within the meaning of s. 13, ante, p. 45, and was, therefore, vested in the authority, but that the trespass of using the plaintiff's land for the purpose of making a communication with the sewer could not be justified by any of the provisions of the Act, even on the assumption that the sewer was vested in the authority; that the defendant's predecessor in title, not having complied with the provisions of s. 21, would have had no right to empty sewage matter into it; and that, if without leave of the authority the defendant had caused filth to flow so as to create a nuisance on the plaintiff's land, he could not justify by showing that the sewer was vested in the authority. On the last point this case may be compared with Kinson Pottery Co. v. Poole (Mayor, etc. of), p. 30, ante, and Graham v. Wroughton, [1901] 2 Ch. 451; 65 J. P. 710, which show that a person, who by causing his drains to empty faecal matter into an authority's sewer creates a nuisance at the spot where such sewer discharges, cannot (when proceeded against summarily or civilly) justify himself under this section unless he can show that he has fulfilled the conditions prescribed by it. See also Fordom v. Parsons and Wincanton R. D. C. v. Parsons on pp. 50, 51, ante, as to the liabilities of an occupier and an authority respectively.

Note to Section 21.

Right to connect : extent of.

In Waltham Holy Cross U. D. C. v. Lea Conservancy Board (1910), 74 J. P. 250 ; 103 L. T. 192, a landowner had constructed a system of sewers and sewage works for houses on his estate, and the authority had never taken any part in the management or exercised any control ; it was held that the authority could not be convicted of "causing or suffering" the effluent to flow into a river (cf. Thames Conservators v. Gravesend Corporation, on p. 69, ante) ; but it was apparently assumed that other persons would have a right to connect drains with the sewers (if they could do so without trespassing), since the sewers vested in the authority. See also as to the responsibility for a similar private sewerage system, Titterton v. Kingsbury Collieries, Ltd., on p. 69, ante. As to these cases, however, see Rochford U. D. C. v. Port of London Authority, ibid.

Where the P. H. A., 1890, s. 18, post, p. 830, is in force, a person entitled to connect a drain with a sewer may require the authority to do the work for him at his expense. The section provides for payment in advance upon an estimate of the cost ; and also for agreements as to the enlarging, etc. of drains.

The right of an owner to connect his drain with a sewer has been said to be an absolute right, and not to be affected by the fact that the sewer empties into a water-course, and that the sending of sewage into it may create an infringement of s. 17, ante, p. 59 (Ainley v. Kirkheaton L. B. (1891), 60 L. J. Ch. 734 ; 55 J. P. 230 ; followed in Brown v. Dunstable (Mayor, etc. of), [1899] 2 Ch. 378 ; 63 J. P. 519). But it was held by a Divisional Court in Kinson Pottery Co. v. Poole (Mayor, etc. of), supra, and by BYRNE, J. (and, semble, also by COLLINS, L.J.) in Graham v. Wroughton, supra, that this section confers no right to cause drains carrying faecal matter to empty into a sewer used by an authority for surface and slop water only. See also Leeds and District Worsted Dyers, etc. Association, Ltd. v. West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board (1906), 70 J. P. 480, per DARLING, J. ; Wincanton R. D. C. v. Parsons, on p. 51, ante, per RIDLEY, J. ; Molloy v. Gray, on p. 51, ante ; Gibbings v. Hungerford, p. 60, ante ; and Harwich Corporation v. Brewster (1901), 17 T. L. R. 274. To connect new pipes from water-closets to an old drain carrying no faecal matter into a sewer is in effect to make a fresh connection with the sewer : per BYRNE, J., in Graham v. Wroughton, supra ; but, when there is an existing connection for sewage, trifling additions to, or alterations in, the internal arrangements have not that effect : per EADY, J., in East Barnet Valley U. D. C. v. Stallard, p. 81, post.

Upon somewhat similar provisions in the Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862, s. 61, it was held that where a person had with an authority's consent caused a drain to communicate with a sewer, he might afterwards use the drain to the full extent of its capacity. But where an old drain from premises outside a district had formerly drained into an open sewer, which was subsequently converted into a covered sewer, the authority reconnecting the drain with it when it was covered in, it was held that the owner of the drain could not send an increase of sewage from new houses through the drain into the sewer without permission (Metropolitan Board of Works v. L. & N. W. Rail. Co. (1881), 17 Ch. D. 246). It was held that a district board of works had no power under the same Act, if it approved of the plans and sections of sewers proposed to be constructed by a landowner and branched into the main system, to withhold their sanction in writing to the construction of the same until he should pay them a sum of money to cover their expenses in supervising the work (R. v. Greenwich District Board of Works (1884), 1 C. & E. 236).

It was held by CHARLES, J., in Peebles v. Oswaldtwistle U. D. C., [1897] 1 Q. B., at p. 392, that the right conferred by this section is not limited to drains conveying ordinary sewage only. "It is clear," he said, "from the definition of 'premises' and 'house' (see s. 4, ante, pp. 7, 20), that the owner or occupier of a factory is entitled under s. 21 to connect his premises by a drain with the sewer. But having done so, what may be put into the drain? Is he to be limited to passing into it ordinary sewage only? I think not. In my opinion he may use the drain to its utmost capacity, and pass liquids of all kinds into it, including those coming from his manufacturing processes, provided, indeed, that they are not liquids injurious to health. This would have been preventible by injunction under the nuisance clauses of the Act of 1875 (see especially s. 91), and is now expressly forbidden by the P. H. A., 1890, s. 17." Although the judgment of CHARLES, J., was reversed on other points, it was not reversed so far as regards the foregoing quotation. This was followed by BYRNE, J., who decided that where the owners of buildings have acquired a right to discharge drainage into a public sewer through a connection lawfully made, such right extends to the discharge of trade and manufacturing effluents, and that the provisions of s. 7 of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, do not justify an authority in cutting off the connection, even though the discharge of the trade effluent prejudicially affects the disposal of the sewage matter conveyed through the sewer (Eastwood Brothers, Ltd. v. Honley U. D. C., [1900] 1 Ch. 781; 64 J. P. 792). [See a decision upon a local Act making special provision as to the discharge of trade effluent interfering with treatment or utilisation of sewage, Garfield v. Yorkshire Laundries, Ltd. (1905), 69 J. P. 411; 3 L. G. R. 1192.] The judgment of BYRNE, J., in Eastwood v. Honley U. D. C. was affirmed on grounds which did not necessitate a decision as to the right of a manufacturer to send trade effluent into a sewer, because the authority had already allowed the effluent to be introduced into their sewer, and the only questions were whether the sewer had become insufficient and whether the provisoes following the first part of s. 7 of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, applied (Eastwood Brothers, Ltd. v. Honley U. D. C., [1901] 1 Ch. 645). In Brook v. Meltham U. D. C., [1908] 2 K. B. 780; 72 J. P. 409, the Lords Justices expressed disapproval of the decision of CHARLES, J., supra; and see the observations of Lord MACNAGHTEN in Butterworth v. West Riding Rivers Board, [1909] A. C. 45; 73 J. P. 89. See also the notes under s. 7 of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, in App. I., post, p. 1653. It was in 1903 apparently the view of the law officers that the last-mentioned section is the only one under which a manufacturer can claim to drain his trade effluents into an existing sewer, s. 21, supra, having no application, in their opinion to trade effluents (see Third Report of Royal Commission on Sewage Disposal, at pp. xi. and xii.). Reference must also be made to the P. H. A., 1890, for, in districts where ss. 16, 17 (see post, p. 828) are in operation, it is an offence to send into a sewer any injurious matter, chemical refuse, steam, etc., so as to impede the sewer or cause a nuisance.

If the authority once authorise or permit drains to be made into their sewer they cannot afterwards stop them up (Clegg v. Castleford L. B., W. N. (1874), p. 229; Att.-Gen. v. Guardians of Dorking Union, ante, p. 67; Att.-Gen. v. Acton L. B., ante, p. 67; Ogilvie v. Blything Union, ante, p. 67; Att.-Gen. v. Clerkenwell Vestry, ante, p. 68; Ainley v. Kirkheaton L. B., ante, p. 60; Kirkheaton L. B. v. Ainley, [1892] 2 Q. B. 274; 57 J. P. 36; Brown v. Dunstable (Mayor, etc. of), ante, p. 68; Eastwood Brothers, Ltd. v. Honley U. D. C., supra; Harrington (Earl of) v. Derby Corporation, ante, p. 69. See, however, Gibbings v. Hungerford, on p. 60, ante. In East Barnet Valley U. D. C. v. Stallard, p. 81, post, SWINFEN EADY, J., and apparently COZENS-HARDY, M.R., regarded these decisions as applicable to s. 22 as well as s. 21).

expenses.

(e) Section 251, post, p. 550, provides for the recovery both of the penalty and expenses. As a penalty is in the nature of a punishment for an offence, it is recoverable on information. The procedure, therefore, differs from that for the recovery of expenses which are recoverable upon complaints, and are civil debts within ss. 6 and 35 of the S. J. A., 1879. This distinction did not exist at the time of the passing of the Act; the procedure was then the same in both cases. If, therefore, the penalty is proceeded for, the proceedings must be begun by information; if the expenses, by complaint under the sections just mentioned. The expenses referred to are the expenses of the closing only. It is to be presumed that if the works have occasioned damage to the sewer, the authority can maintain an action in respect of such damage; and, moreover, that they may obtain an injunction to stay the works of any person before completion, so as to prevent damage which the penalty would be inadequate to repair.

Note to
Section 21.

22. The owner (a) or occupier of any premises without the district of a local authority may cause any sewer (b) or drain from such premises to communicate with any sewer of the local authority on such terms and conditions (c) as may be agreed on between such owner or occupier and such local authority, or as in case of dispute may be settled, at the option of the owner or occupier (d), by a court of summary jurisdiction or by arbitration in manner provided by this Act (e).

Use of sewers
by owners and occupiers
district.

Forms of agreement for use under this section will be found in Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at pp. 517, 524.

(a) See the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 8.

(b) The previous section was confined to a drain, but here the term sewer has been introduced, because a more extended easement than that of a drain may be required in respect of premises without the district. The sewer may have to be continued for some distance.

cation by

(c) A dwelling-house just outside the B. district drained into a cesspool, from which an overflow drain ran into a pond; both cesspool and pond were within the district. The lodge, which was also within the district, was drained by a pipe running into the overflow drain between the cesspool and pond. The pond becoming a nuisance, the owner, at the instance of the B. council, connected the overflow drain with a storm-water drain in the district. Later, the council without consulting the owner connected such storm-water sewer with a soil sewer; and, later still, again without consulting him, connected the overflow drain direct with an extension of the soil sewer. The council now called on the owner to agree terms under s. 22 for a continuance of this connection or to provide other means for disposing of his sewage, and claimed an injunction to restrain him from allowing sewage from the house to enter their sewers till terms were agreed. It was held that, the connection having been already made, the claim failed (East Barnet Valley U. D. C. v. Stallard, [1909] 2 Ch. 555; 74 J. P. 9). See also s. 28, post, p. 90, as to agreements between authorities for the communication of sewers with the sewers of the adjoining districts. The distinction between the two sections lies in the method of communication with the receiving authority's sewer. When this is direct, without the use of a sewer belonging to the outside authority, owners and occupiers may avail themselves of the powers of s. 22. Where, however, the sewage is to pass through a sewer belonging to the outside authority before entering the sewer of the receiving authority, procedure must be under s. 28. It may be suggested that if a communication were wrongfully made so as to cause damage, an action for trespass would probably lie. An injunction would probably be granted even if there were no damage beyond the fact that the communication had been made without compliance with the conditions of the local authority. Under the corresponding section of the Act of 1848, the owner of land adjoining a district agreed by deed with the local board to do certain works and pay £10 a year; and the board agreed to give him leave to drain through their drain all sewage from the property and houses then belonging to him, and from any houses thereafter to be erected on his property. Many more houses were afterwards erected and the board's successors were, under a new Act, prevented from passing their sewage into the Thames as formerly. It was held that the deed was not ultra vires, and that the board could bind their successors as to the sewage of houses not then in existence; and further, that though the board were trustees for the ratepayers, they had exercised their discretion, and the agreement did not appear at the time improvident, and its turning out badly for them did not affect it. It was held also, that the law being altered so as to prevent the discharge of sewage into the Thames was no ground for setting aside the deed (New Windsor (Mayor, etc. of) v. Stovell (1884), 27 Ch. D. 665). See another instance in which a contract of a corporate body tying its hands at a future time was held to be valid (Att.-Gen. v. Mayor of Hastings (1902), 67 J. P. 165 ; 1 L. G. R. 41 ; and cf. Stourcliffe Estate Co. v. Bournemouth Corporation, in notes to s. 164, post, p. 368). It was held that a metropolitan vestry could not enter into a binding agreement to receive sewage into its sewers from a district outside the metropolitan area (St. Mary, Islington (Vestry of) v. Hornsey U. D. C., [1900] 1 Ch. 695). (An appeal to the House of Lords was adjourned sine die for the parties to agree to an arrangement. See note (b) to s. 28, at p. 91.) The language used in the above section hardly seems to authorise the council of a district outside the metropolis to receive sewage from houses within the metropolitan area.

It may be noted that there is no provision under which owners or occupiers who have made themselves liable for payments under agreements with neighbouring councils, can be exempted from contributing (in rates) to the cost of sewerage in their own district (unless possibly under s. 211 (4), post, p. 478), or can transfer their liability to the council of their district. This has led to hardship in some cases.

(d) Compare the provisions of s. 181, post, p. 431. When a dispute arises, if the owner or occupier do not exercise the option at once, the authority may propose one alternative, and if it be not rejected, and the alternative selected, within a reasonable time, it will probably be best for them to proceed in the court, as proceedings there can be more readily supported than would be the case in an arbitration.

(e) An owner of land proposed to lay out some of it for building, and gave notice to the authority of an adjoining district of his intention to connect his proposed sewer with their sewer. The authority objected, and stated that if he insisted on arbitration, they would appoint an arbitrator under protest, and raise their objection at every stage of the proceedings. He thereupon commenced an action claiming a declaration of his right to connect. It was held that although there is jurisdiction to make a declaratory judgment under Order XXV., r. 5, this jurisdiction must be exercised with caution, and that as the proposed sewer had not yet been constructed, and no houses yet built, it was undesirable to make a general declaration as to future rights, which might hamper an arbitrator or court of summary jurisdiction (Faber v. Gosforth U. D. C. (1903), 67 J. P. 197 ; 88 L. T. 549).

Power of local
authority
to enforce drainage of
houses.

23. Where any house (a) within the district of a local authority is without a drain sufficient for effectual drainage (b), the local authority shall by written notice (c) require the owner (d) or occupier of such house, within a reasonable time therein specified, to make a covered drain or drains emptying into any sewer which the local authority are entitled to use, and which is not more than one hundred feet from the site of such house (e) ; but if no such means of drainage are within that distance, then emptying into such covered cesspool or other place not being under any house as the local authority direct ; and the local authority may require any such drain or drains to be of such materials and size (f), and to be laid at such level, and with such fall as on the report of their surveyor may appear to them to be necessary.

If such notice is not complied with, the local authority may, after the expiration of the time specified in the notice, do the work required (g), and may recover in a summary manner (h) the expenses incurred by them in so doing from the owner, or may by order declare the same to be private improvement expenses (i).

Provided (k) that where, in the opinion of the local authority, greater expense would be incurred in causing the drains of two or more houses to empty into an existing sewer pursuant to this section, than in constructing a new sewer and causing such drains to empty therein, the local authority may construct such new sewer, and require the owners or occupiers (l) of such houses to cause their drains to empty therein, and may apportion as they deem just (m) the expenses of the construction of such sewer among the owners of the several houses, and recover in a summary manner (h) the sums apportioned from such owners, or may by order declare the same to be private improvement expenses (i).

Section 23.

In connection herewith it should be mentioned that increased powers may be obtained by a local authority if ss. 36, 37 and 49 of the P. H. A., 1907, be applied in their district. See this Act set out, post, p. 1096.

(a) For definition, see s. 4, ante, p. 20. It is immaterial when the house was built.

(b) The P. H. A., 1848, s. 49, required a report by the surveyor, and made the “Sufficiency” decision of the local board conclusive. Here no report is required, and the fact of insufficient drainage may be questioned by the owner or occupier. The clause is, however, nearly identical with 29 & 30 Vict. c. 90, s. 10. A report by the surveyor would appear to be desirable, and a form of report is set out in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 529.

This section is sometimes erroneously regarded as enabling an authority to require an owner to alter his system of drainage, though it may be sufficient in itself, and to justify their requiring an owner to abolish a cesspool, and drain into a sewer. This cannot be done under the section, if the drains are in fact sufficient, even if there is a convenient sewer. Nor, if his drains are sufficient, can they require him to make new drains into a new sewer which they see fit to construct. On these points the decisions under the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, ss. 69, 73, appear to be applicable and conclusive. In Marylebone (Vestry of) v. Viret (1865), 19 C. B. (N.S.) 424, a vestry required an occupier to make a new drain. It was held that the vestry were in fact seeking to make a complete new scheme of drainage, and that the occupier was not required to make the new drain or bear the charge thereof. The work was necessary, not because the drain in itself required improvement, in which case the circumstances would have been within s. 73 (which corresponds to this section), but because of the alteration of the sewers which brought the case within s. 69 (corresponding to s. 18 of this Act). See also Att.-Gen. v. Clerkenwell Vestry, [1891] 3 Ch. 527, ante, p. 68; St. Martin's-in-the-Fields (Vestry of) v. Ward, [1897] 1 Q. B. 40; 61 J. P. 19, and Molloy v. Gray (1889), 24 L. R. Ir. 258, ante, p. 51.

No power to compel alteration of “sufficient” drains at private cost.

(c) See as to the authentication and service of this notice, ss. 266, 267, post, p. 590. Notice. For a form of notice, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 530. On the corresponding section of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, s. 473, it was held that a notice by an inspector without the direction of the vestry was insufficient, and that expenses incurred on the owner's default in carrying out the requirements of the notice could not be recovered (St. Leonard's, Shoreditch (Vestry of) v. Holmes (1885), 50 J. P. 132). The ground of the decision was that the vestry had to exercise a discretion in each case, and it was not enough for an inspector to act as he pleased, and rely upon their subsequent approval. No doubt the same principle applies to the text. Compare London C. C. v. Hobbs (1897), 61 J. P. 85; 75 L. T. 687, and cases in notes to s. 36, post, p. 95.

(d) See definition in s. 4, ante, p. 8. The authority have an option as to “Owner” or whether they will give notice to the owner or occupier, and will doubtless be guided by their view as to how prompt and effectual action can be best obtained. See s. 306, under which the owner may be empowered to enter when the occupier prevents him.

Where the P. H. A., 1890, s. 18 (3), post, p. 831, is in operation, the authority may agree with the owner themselves to make the drain.

(e) There is no reference to the sea as in the former Act, since it is not desirable to contemplate the pollution of the sea-shore; but the latter part of the clause would cover drainage into the sea when practicable without injurious effects. See hereon, cases cited on p. 71, ante, and s. 12 of the P. H. A., 1907, post, p. 1102.

Note to Section 23.

Distance from site, how measured.

Apparently the measurement must be taken not from the boundary of the curtilage, but from the house or some domestic office occupied with it. An authority served on an owner a notice under this section and a notice under s. 36, post, requiring him to provide a sufficient water-closet for the house. The sewer indicated in the first notice ran through gardens at the back belonging to the same owner, but let by him on leases which gave him no right to enter and lay a drain. The sewer was 120 feet from the back of the house, 98 feet from a detached building used as a washhouse or kitchen, and 30 feet from the curtilage wall, against which was erected a privy. The owner disregarded the notices; and the authority entered, converted the privy into a water-closet, and laid a drain from it across the gardens to the sewer. It was held that the notice under s. 36 was a good notice; and that, as the washhouse and privy were within 100 feet of the sewer, and as the owner had not shown that his tenants would not allow him to enter the gardens and lay a drain, the authority were entitled to recover the cost of the work (Meyrick v. Pembroke Corporation (1912), 76 J. P. 365; 10 L. G. R. 710). See also Blashill v. Chambers (1884), 14 Q. B. D. 479; 49 J. P. 388; and Wright v. Wallasey L. B. (1887), 18 Q. B. D. 783. In the absence of express provision, or something in the context to the contrary, distance in an Act of Parliament must be measured in a straight line on a horizontal plane, or in common parlance, as the crow flies. See Mouflet v. Cole (1872), L. R. 8 Ex. 32, as to Acts passed before the Interpretation Act, 1889, and s. 34 of that Act as to later Acts.

Materials and size of drain.

(f) It appears from Austin v. Vestry of Lambeth (1840), 4 Jur. (N.S.) 274, that it is for an authority to decide whether their directions are complied with in regard to the materials to be used. A vestry ordered a drain to be made with pipes of stoneware of the best kind and quality, but the builder laid down Aylesford pipes, and the vestry declared that these were not stoneware and proceeded to remove them. STUART, V.-C., held that it was for them to determine the question, and refused an interlocutory injunction. His decision was confirmed (27 L. J. Ch. 388, 392); and the bill was afterwards dismissed with costs, the vestry not having acted capriciously or vexatiously (4 Jur. (N.S.) 1032). The authority must also determine the size of the drain. See Woodward v. Cotton (1834), 3 L. J. Ex. 300.

Difficulties with adjoining owners.

If in any particular case difficulty arises by reason of the owner not having a right to carry his drain through his neighbour's or his own tenant's land, the authority may be able to obviate it by means of the powers conferred upon them. For example, if the house to be drained is within 100 feet of a sewer, but the intervening land belongs to another person, the owner of the house would not by receiving the notice be entitled to make his drain through the intervening land, for the notice does not enable him to commit a trespass. See Russell v. Knight and Wood v. Ealing Tenants, cited in the notes to s. 21, ante, p. 78; Meyrick v. Pembroke Corporation, supra; Artlidge v. Islington Borough Council, in note to s. 90, post, p. 161; and Scarborough (Mayor of) v. Scarborough R. S. A. (1876), 1 Ex. D. 344, a case of a notice under s. 94 to abate a nuisance on another person's land. But the authority might, if the connection could be effected by laying a new length of sewer, lawfully proceed under s. 16, making compensation under s. 308 to the person whose land was interfered with. In Finlinson v. Porter (1875), L. R. 10 Q. B. 188; 39 J. P. 661, the defendant had conveyed certain land to the plaintiff subject to the joint ownership, and right to the use by the defendant, of a drain running through the land conveyed, together with the right of entering and repairing the drain or replacing pipes in it. The drain discharged into a sewer, which was afterwards removed by the local board, who constructed another at a lower depth. The defendant thereupon lowered the drain and put in fresh pipes in order to adapt it to the new sewer, and it was held that he was entitled to do so, whether his right under the deed was to be regarded as that of a tenant in common of the drain, or as an easement only. But the burden of such an easement must not be increased. See Watson v. Troughton (1882), 47 J. P. 518.

Right of authority to execute work.

(g) "The conditions prescribed by this section as a preliminary to the sanitary body taking the work out of the hands of the owner have regard solely to his rights. They are designed to control the action of the board as against him and not to limit their capacity to do the work. It is not permitted to them arbitrarily to interfere and do the work at the owner's expense without first giving him an opportunity of doing it himself. But if they were to do so, he is the only person who could complain. The Act requires that the work shall be done by the one party or the other, and the owner may waive the option given him by the Act if he pleases, and agree with the urban authority that the drain shall be made by them as if the preliminaries had been observed" (per LUSH, J., in Hall v. Corporation of Batley (1877), 47 L. J. Q. B. 148; 42 J. P. 151). And see the P. H. A., 1890, s. 18 (3), referred to in note (d), supra.

Note to
Section 23.

(h) See as to the recovery of these expenses, s. 251, post, p. 550, and note (e) to Recovery of s. 21, ante, p. 80. The defendant may, of course, dispute the validity of the expenses. original notice on such grounds as that his drain was sufficient or the sewer too far off. As to the incidence of the expenses as between a tenant for life and remainderman, vendor and purchaser, landlord and tenant, etc., see Re Barney, Harrison v. Barney, [1894] 3 Ch. 562, and other cases in the notes to s. 104.

(i) See s. 213, post, p. 492.

(k) This provision applies where an authority consider that it will be cheaper Construction for the owners to bear the cost of a new length of sewer and short connecting of new sewer. drains, than to have to make a long drain for each house to the sewer as it exists. Note that the provision differs from that in the Acts relating to the metropolis, as to which see Bateman v. Poplar District Board of Works (1886), 33 Ch. D. 360, and other cases on pp. 32, 33, as to drainage by "combined operation."

(l) See note (d), ante. A form of notice will be found in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents. Vol. X., at p. 531.

(m) There may be an appeal to the L. G. B. under s. 268, post, p. 592.

apportionment.

24. Where (a) any house within the district of a local authority has a drain communicating with any sewer, which drain though sufficient for the effectual drainage of the house is not adapted to the general sewerage system of the district, or is in the opinion of the local authority otherwise objectionable (b), the local authority may, on condition (c) of providing a drain or drains as effectual for the drainage of the house, and communicating with such other sewer as they think fit, close such first-mentioned drain, and may do any works necessary for that purpose, and the expenses of those works, and of the construction of any drain or drains provided by them under this section, shall be deemed to be expenses properly incurred by them in the execution of this Act (d). Power of local authority to require houses to be drained into new sewers.

A form of notice of intention to proceed under this section is given in Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 533.

(a) This provision applies to houses built before the authority established their own sewers, as otherwise the proper communication would have been made. It also applies where a sewer is reconstructed or replaced by a new sewer. The authority cannot escape liability under it by requiring the owner to provide new drains under colour of s. 23, ante. See St. Martin's-in-the-Fields (Vestry of) v. Ward and other cases, on p. 83, ante. Object of section.

(b) See s. 41, post, p. 104, for the procedure where a drain is a nuisance or injurious to health.

(c) The provision is to be made before the previous drain is closed.

(d) And therefore payable according to s. 207 or s. 229 as the case may be; Incidence they are not to be charged to the owners or occupiers. The L. G. B. permit these of cost. drains and their junctions to be included in estimates upon which loans are sanctioned, regarding the drains as branch sewers.

25. It shall not be lawful in any urban district (a) newly to erect any house or to rebuild any house which has been pulled down to or below the ground floor (b), or to occupy any house so newly erected or Penalty on building house with-rebuilt, unless and until (bb) a covered drain or drains be constructed, of such size and materials, and at such level, and with such fall as on the report of the surveyor (c) may appear to the urban authority to be necessary for the effectual drainage of such house (d); and the drain or drains so to be constructed shall empty into any sewer which the urban authority are entitled to use, and which is within one hundred feet of some part of the site (e) of the house to be built or rebuilt; but if no such means of drainage are within that distance, then shall empty into such covered cesspool or other place, not being under any house, as the urban authority direct.

Any person who causes any house to be erected or rebuilt (f) or any drain to be constructed in contravention of this section shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding fifty pounds.

In this connection reference should be made to the provisions of ss. 36, 37, and 49 of the P. H. A., 1907, which, if applied in any district, will prevent the use of rain-water pipes as soil pipes and the use of water or stack pipes as ventilating shafts, and will give additional power in connection with the provision of sinks and drains.

Application to rural districts.

(a) Note the restriction. If a rural authority find it desirable that this provision should be in operation, they should apply to the L. G. B. to grant them the powers of an urban authority with respect to any particular contributory place or places under s. 276, post, p. 609.

(b) This constitutes a new building. See s. 159, post, p. 359.

(bb) Semble, the words "rebuilt . . . or occupy . . . unless and until," must be read distributively, so that the drain need not be made before rebuilding, so long as it is made as part of the operation and before the house is occupied.

Report.

(d) Generally the byelaws require plans and specifications of the building and its drainage to be submitted to the authority. These are referred to the surveyor who is to report to the authority. They must then decide as to the sufficiency of the proposed drainage, and give their directions as to the course to be followed. There does not appear to be any appeal against their directions if their discretion has been exercised within the limits of the power conferred by this section. See Matthews v. Strachan, infra. An authority cannot compel a building owner to make a sewer as distinguished from a drain under this section (Clarke v. Paddington Vestry (1859), 5 Jur. (N.S.) 138). In deciding what is "necessary for the effectual drainage" of a new house under this section the council must consider only what is necessary for the particular house as regards the size, material, level and fall of the drains. They cannot take into consideration what is desirable having regard to the disposal of the sewage of the district generally, and upon that ground require separate drains for sewage and surface water (Matthews v. Strachan, [1901] 2 K. B. 540; 65 J. P. 789), but, semble, they might acquire powers in this behalf by byelaws made under s. 157 (ibid., per RIDLEY, J., [1901] 2 K. B. 548). A builder submitted a plan for a cottage close to the sea, showing a proposed drain from the sink to a cesspool (there being no water-closet). The plan complied with the byelaws. The surveyor advised the urban authority that, as the proposed drainage was below the level of ordinary spring tides, the cesspool would at such tides become filled with sea water by percolation, and the system rendered inoperative. The authority consequently disapproved the plan on the ground that it would provide no effectual drainage, and that no satisfactory system of drainage had been submitted. It was held that they had no right to refuse their approval to a plan which complied with the byelaws on general grounds outside the merits of the plan itself (R. v. Bexhill Corporation, Ex parte Cornell (1911), 75 J. P. 385; 9 L. G. R. 641).

The authority may require a separate drain for each house though only semi-detached, or forming part of a block constituting only one building (Woodford U. D. C. v. Stark (1902), 66 J. P. 536 ; 18 T. L. R. 439). In districts where the P. H. A., 1890, s. 18 (3), post, p. 831, is in force, the authority may agree with the owner to make the drain.

Note to Section 25.

See also the P. H. A., 1907, s. 36, which may be applied to the district of any authority. By it, "no pipe used for the carrying off of rain water from any roof shall be used for the purpose of carrying off the soil or drainage from any privy or water-closet. Any person who shall offend against this section shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds and to a daily penalty not exceeding forty shillings."

(e) See notes (e) and (f) to s. 23, ante, p. 83.

Distance from site, etc.

(f) There is no penalty imposed upon the occupier. As to the recovery of the penalty, see s. 251, post, p. 550.

26. Any person who in any urban district, without the written consent of the urban authority (a)—

(1) Causes any building (b) to be newly erected over any sewer of the urban authority ; or,

(2) Causes any vault arch or cellar to be newly built or constructed under the carriageway of any street (c), shall forfeit to the urban authority the sum of five pounds and a further sum of forty shillings for every day during which the offence is continued after written notice in this behalf from the urban authority (d) ; and the urban authority may cause any building vault arch or cellar erected or constructed in contravention of this section to be altered pulled down or otherwise dealt with as they may think fit (e), and may recover in a summary manner (f) any expenses incurred by them in doing so from the offender.

(a) There is no special mode of giving this consent, as in the former Act. It may be expressed in a letter from the clerk to the council. The consent ought to be entered on the council's minutes, and a copy of the minute forwarded to the applicant. For a form, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 537. In some cases it will take the form of an agreement : see forms in Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at pp. 537, 540.

Form of consent.

(b) As to what is a building, see note to s. 4, ante, p. 22. The conditions of sale relating to a dwelling-house and grounds, not sold for building purposes, provided inter alia that any error or omission in the particulars of sale affecting the nature of the property should not annul the sale, but should be matter for compensation, and that the property was sold subject to all rights of way and other easements. A deed of mutual covenants, subject to which the property was sold, precluded any building thereon. The purchaser discovered that there was a public sewer passing under the garden at the rear of, and some distance from, the house, and a manhole used for obtaining access to the sewer. The vendor was ignorant of the existence of the sewer. The sewer was vested in the local authority, and no buildings could be erected over it without their sanction. The purchaser objected to complete on the ground that the vendor was unable to make a title to the property. It was held that the circumstance did not justify the court in releasing the purchaser from his contract ; the existence of the sewer did not so alter the character of the piece of land that the purchaser could say he did not get what was intended to be sold, and the case was one for compensation (In re Brewer and Hankin's Contract (1899), 80 L. T. 127). This decision was distinguished in a later case where a culverted watercourse was discovered in property sold for building purposes (In re Puckett and Smith's Contract, [1902] 2 Ch. 258). In Pensel and Wilson v. Tucker, [1907] 2 Ch. 191 ; 71 J. P. 547, it was held that, owing to the existence of a sewer (vested in the local authority) under part of property, the Effect of section upon contracts for sale of land.

- Note to Section 26. — vendor was unable to convey all that he had contracted to sell ; and that he had not made a good title. In Shepherd v. Croft, [1911] 1 Ch. 521, where property was sold primarily, but not solely, for residential purposes, it was held that the existence of a culverted watercourse was not so material a defect as to justify the purchaser in refusing to complete upon payment of compensation.
- Vaults under roadway of street. (c) See the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 15. This prohibition is introduced here because such vault or cellar might interfere with the course of a sewer hereafter to be made. It refers to the carriageway only, and has no reference to the foot-path. As to the repair of vaults, arches, and cellars under streets in districts where the P. H. A., 1890, has been adopted, see s. 35 of that Act, post, p. 851.
- Recovery of forfeiture. (d) Forfeitures are recovered by process described in s. 251, post, p. 550. A forfeiture under this section is recoverable as a penalty, for it will be observed that the section speaks of the offence. The proceedings are, therefore, in their nature criminal, and the forfeitures must be recovered on information. See note (e) to s. 21, ante, p. 80. The five pounds is recoverable in any case, the forty shillings only after notice. A form of notice for use under this section will be found in Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 536.
- Removal of structures. (e) In removing the structure the authority must not interfere with anything not forming part of it, e.g., pipes or wires laid in the subsoil (Walker U. D. C. v. Wigham (1901), 66 J. P. 152 ; 85 L. T. 579).
- Recovery of expenses. (f) See s. 251, post, p. 550, and note (e) to s. 21, ante, p. 80. These expenses are recoverable on complaint, and constitute a civil debt under the S. J. A., 1879, for although the section speaks of them as recoverable from the offender, they are not in the nature of penalties for the offence, which are provided for by the previous part of the section.

Disposal of Sewage.

Powers for disposing of sewage. 27. For the purpose of receiving storing disinfecting distributing or otherwise disposing of sewage any (a) local authority may—

- (1) Construct (b) any works within their district, or (subject to the provisions of this Act as to sewage works without the district of the local authority) without (c) their district ; and
- (2) Contract (d) for the use of purchase or take on lease any land buildings engines materials or apparatus either within or without (c) their district ; and
- (3) Contract (d) to supply for any period not exceeding twenty-five years (e) any person with sewage and as to the execution and costs of works either within or without (c) their district for the purposes of such supply :

Provided that no nuisance be created in the exercise of any of the powers given by this section (f).

- Extent of section. (a) This and the following sections apply to both urban and rural authorities.
- (b) The corresponding section in the P. H. A., 1848, s. 46, was held not to enable a local board to enter land without the owner's consent, and make a tank therein for the reception of sewage from a sewer proposed to be made after a report from their surveyor and notice to the owner. Where such a proceeding was proposed an injunction was granted (Sutton v. Mayor of Norwich (1858), 27 L. J. Ch. 739). See also Att.-Gen. v. Metropolitan Board of Works (1863), 9 L. T. 139). While, therefore, an authority have power to make sewers in or through private lands (s. 16) without the consent of the owner (paying compensation), they have no such power to make works for the disposal of sewage under that section. An engine-house with pump and machinery, erected partly above and partly below the level of the ground, for lifting and forcing along a rising main the sewage of a district to a common outfall for treatment is a work for "the purpose of receiving or otherwise disposing of sewage," within the meaning of this section, for which the necessary land must be purchased or leased (King's College, Cambridge v. Uxbridge R. D. C., [1901] 2 Ch. 768). For the provisions applicable to the purchase of land, see ss. 175 and 176, post, pp. 410, 415.

Section 27.

(c) The P. H. A., 1848, s. 44, used general language in reference to the making of the sewer. Nevertheless, it was held in Haywood v. Lovendes (1859), 28 L. J. Ch. 400, that a local board could not make sewers out of their district. Hence 21 & 42 Vict. c. 98, s. 30, and 24 & 25 Vict. c. 61, ss. 4—7, were passed, the latter of which contains provisions which are now set out in ss. 32—34 of this Act, and apply only to a sewer or other work out of the district.

(d) As to the contracts of urban authorities, see s. 174, post, p. 396. All contracts with them should be under seal if the value or amount exceeds £50; all contracts with rural authorities should be under seal irrespective of their value.

As to the redemption of tithe rent-charge on a purchase under this section, see 41 & 42 Vict. c. 42, s. 1. On being let into possession, the local authority may raise money on the security of the land and works under s. 235, post, p. 531.

(e) A longer term than was provided in the previous Act (30 & 31 Vict. c. 113, s. 4). Great care is required in framing these contracts. See further, s. 30, post, p. 92, as to the terms of the contract. Terms of supply.

A local board leased to a company the sewage works of a town and a plot of land for a term of fourteen years, the company covenanting that they would during the term keep the outfall of the works, with the engines, pumps, and apparatus, in proper working order, so as to admit of the free flow of the sewage through the sewers communicating with the works, and so that the same might not at any time be stopped. To a bill by the local board complaining that the company's works were insufficient to treat the sewage successfully, that they were pumping only a portion of the sewage out of the sewers, and were damming back the residue in the sewers so as to be a nuisance to the inhabitants, and that the plaintiffs were being threatened with proceedings, and praying for an injunction to restrain the defendants from permitting the sewage to remain in the sewers so as to be a nuisance or a damage to the plaintiffs, and from damming back the sewage in the sewers, the defendants demurred on the ground that the court could not superintend the proper performance of the works, that the plaintiffs had alleged no special damage, and that it was not the practice of the court to restrain the infringement of a public right at the suit of a corporation, except at the instance or in the presence of the Attorney-General. The court overruled the demurrer and granted the injunction (Nuneaton L. B. v. General Sewage Co. (1875), L. R. 20 Eq. 127). O. agreed to grant to a local board a lease of land for the purpose of an outfall for drainage, and "to allow the use of the land below the level of the said outfall for drainage purposes." O. was to have the benefit of the sewage matter, paying nothing therefor. The board erected a sewage tank with an outlet, but without any works for distributing the sewage over O.'s land. It was held that the agreement did not give the board a right to indiscriminately pour the sewage on the land, and that they must use proper means for distributing it in a manner to benefit the land, and not to injure it for agricultural purposes (Witham L. B. v. Oliver (1884), 1 T. L. R. 60).

(f) See the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, s. 24. This prohibition applies to private as well as public nuisances, and authorities have been restrained from carrying on works of sewerage and drainage highly important with reference to their own district and the sanitary state of it, but causing an injury and a nuisance to the property of individuals. As to how far an authority can be held liable for damage caused by a flow of sewage if they succeed to a defective system of drainage constructed by their predecessors, and simply permit the previous use of the sewers to continue, without doing themselves, anything actively, see Glossop v. Heston and Isleworth L. B., Att.-Gen. v. Guardians of Dorking, Foster v. Warblington U. D. C., Jones v. Llanrwst U. D. C., in notes to s. 17, and Att.-Gen. v. Lewes Corporation, on p. 55. Where, however, they make new sewers and connect them with a sewer to which they have succeeded from their predecessors they are liable in damages, for it can under such circumstances be no longer said that there is nonfeasance only. See Foster v. Warblington U. D. C., supra, and Earl of Harrington v. Derby Corporation, cited in the notes to s. 17. Prohibition of nuisance.

Section 27.

A council acquired from P.'s predecessor a site for a sewage farm, and their conveyance gave them "the free right of passage and running of water" from the site through a ditch on land of the vendor, the council using the same so as not to create a nuisance to him or his tenants. In an action by P., and his tenant complaining that the council caused effluent to flow from the farm into the plaintiff's land and ditch and complaining of nuisances by smells, it was held that the fact that the land was sold to be used as a pumping outfall for sewage did not, by operation of an implied grant, preclude the plaintiffs from complaining of the discharge of the effluent, and also that the express grant of the right to discharge water, being limited to the passage and running of water, was not a grant of the right to discharge the effluent (Phillimore v. Watford R. D. C., [1913] 2 Ch. 434; 77 J. P. 453).

There is no right to discharge sewage into the sea without liability for the consequences, and a nuisance caused by such a discharge is embraced in the concluding words of the section. See Hobart v. Southend-on-Sea Corporation (1906), 75 L. J. K. B. 305; 70 J. P. 192; Foster v. Warblington U. D. C.; Owen v. Faversham Corporation (1908), 73 J. P. 33; and Price's Patent Candle Co., Ltd. v. London C. C., p. 62, ante.

See Hewinson v. Cheltenham R. D. C., in notes to s. 299, post, p. 630, for an action in respect of a sewage farm alleged to cause a nuisance.

Where a nuisance is only temporary and occasional, the court will only interfere by injunction in extreme cases (Att.-Gen. v. Preston (Mayor, etc. of), (1896), 13 T. L. R. 14).

By a Provisional Order, confirmed by Act of Parliament, an authority were required to carry out within a fixed time works for the disposal of the sewage of their district approved by the L. G. B., and in case of default this requirement was made enforceable in manner provided by s. 299. The authority constructed sewage works approved by the L. G. B., but, though constructed without negligence, they created both a public and private nuisance. It was held that the Order was only a direction to the authority to exercise the powers of s. 27 within a given time, and did not exempt them from their obligation under the section not to create a nuisance, and an injunction was granted (Att.-Gen. v. Dorchester Corporation (1906), 70 J. P. 281; 94 L. T. 682).

See also notes to s. 17, ante, p. 59, as to pollution of streams.

Power to agree for communication of sewers with sewers of
district.

28. The local authority of any district may, by agreement (a) with the local authority of any adjoining district, and with the sanction of the Local Government Board, cause their sewers to communicate with the sewers of such last-mentioned authority, in such manner and on such terms and subject to such conditions as may be agreed on between the local authorities, or, in case of dispute, may be settled by the Local Government Board (b): Provided that so far as practicable storm waters shall be prevented from flowing from the sewers of the first-mentioned authority into the sewers of the last-mentioned authority, and that the sewage of other districts or places shall not be permitted by the first-mentioned authority to pass into the sewers so as to be discharged into the sewers of the last-mentioned authority without the consent of such last-mentioned authority.

agreement.

(a) This should be under seal. The sanction of the L. G. B. is not required by the section to the actual agreement. Before entertaining proposals for communication, however, the Board consider it essential that the two authorities concerned should have entered into a preliminary agreement for the communication of their sewers. Whether such an agreement should further provide for the terms and conditions, or for the subsequent determination of these by the Board, is a matter for the authorities themselves to decide. Before sanctioning a communication of sewers the Board usually direct a local inquiry or inspection, and give particular attention to the manner in which the receiving authority disposes of its sewage. A form of agreement will be found in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 555. Note to Section 28.

(b) See the further power granted by s. 285 in regard to works which will be for the common benefit of two or more districts. The sanction of the L. G. B. is not required to the joint action there authorised.

An agreement provided that the N. local board should make a sewer and allow the sewers of the C. district to drain into it; but the C. local board were not to permit the sewage of any other district or places to pass into their sewers so as to discharge into the sewer to be made by the N. board. Under Acts of Parliament then in existence, the owners of premises beyond the limits of a district had power to make a sewer to communicate with the sewers of the district, and by an Act subsequently passed (Act of 1875, s. 22), similar powers were given. It was held that the provisions of the agreement were overruled by the subsequent Act, and that the N. board could not restrain the C. board and the owners of premises beyond their district from making sewers which would discharge into the sewer of the N. district. It was held also that the agreement must be taken to have been made subject to the provisions of the law then existing, under which the owners of premises beyond the C. district had similar powers (Newington L. B. v. Cottingham L. B. (1879), 12 Ch. D. 725; and see Mayor, etc. of New Windsor v. Stovell, ante, p. 81). Where there is no agreement such as that mentioned in the section, it appears from Att.-Gen. v. Acton L. B., ante, p. 67, that notwithstanding the obligation imposed on a local board by the P. H. A., 1875, to drain their district, their right to send the sewage of their district directly or indirectly into the sewers belonging to the authority of an adjoining district is, in the absence of express enactment, no higher than the right of a landowner to send sewage from his land on to the land or into the drains of a neighbouring landowner. See also Rathmines and Rathgar Improvement Commissioners v. South Dublin Guardians, ante, p. 31. If, therefore, a prescriptive right has been acquired to send some sewage from one district into the sewers of another, the burden cannot be increased without the consent of the authority of the latter district. The ratio decidendi of Metropolitan Board of Works v. L. & N. W. Rail. Co. (1881), 17 Ch. D. 246 (ante, p. 79), applies to an authority just as it does to an ordinary landowner. An injunction was granted in the absence of proof of substantial damage, on the ground that the defendants by their pleading claimed a right to continue doing that which the court held they were not entitled to do. The court granted such injunction as to the future, but refused to grant a mandatory injunction to compel the stopping up of existing drains: (1) because to do so would cause serious inconvenience to the district; and (2) because it is doubtful whether an authority have power to stop up drains which they have once authorised to be connected with their sewers. And inasmuch as the injunction applied only to the future, the court refused to suspend its operation.

This section does not enable a district council to procure the connection of its sewers with those of an authority in the metropolis (St. Mary, Islington (Vestry of) v. Hornsey U. D. C., [1900] 1 Ch. 695). On an appeal to the House of Lords the hearing was adjourned sine die for the parties to agree to an arrangement which was effected by an award of Lord JAMES OF HEREFORD, dated March 9th, 1905, to which effect is given by the London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1906. See also London C. C. v. Acton U. D. C. (1902), 18 T. L. R. 689. Connection with metropolitan sewers.

29. Any local authority may deal with any lands held by them for the purpose of receiving storing disinfecting or distributing sewage in such manner as they deem most profitable, either by leasing the same for a period not exceeding twenty-one years for agricultural purposes (a), or by contracting with some person to take the whole or a part of the produce of such land, or by farming such land and disposing of the produce thereof; subject to this restriction, that in dealing with land for any of the above purposes, provision shall be made for effectually Power to deal with land appropriated to sewage purposes.

Section 29. disposing of all the sewage brought to such land without creating a nuisance (b).

Member of authority may take a lease.

(a) Such a lease granted to a member of an authority will not disqualify him under s. 46 of the L. G. A., 1894, post, p. 1024 (R. v. Gaskarth (1880), 5 Q. B. D. 321; 44 J. P. 507; followed in Ireland in Local Government Board v. Eivers, [1902] 2 I. R. 262). The same construction is to be placed on s. 12 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, which relates to contracts with members of borough councils.

There is a general provision for leases of the lands of authorities in s. 177.

As to loans on the security of sewage works, see s. 235, post, p. 531.

Rating of sewage farm.

As to the rating of a sewage farm worked by the local authority or by a tenant thereof, see Burton-upon-Trent (Mayor, etc. of) v. Burton-upon-Trent Union (1889), 24 Q. B. D. 197; 54 J. P. 453; London C. C. v. Erith Churchwardens, [1893] A. C. 562; 57 J. P. 821; Leicester (Mayor of) v. Beaumont Leys Churchwardens (1894), 63 L. J. M. C. 176; Stourbridge Main Drainage Board v. Seisdon Union (1902), 66 J. P. 372; 86 L. T. 415; Davies v. Seisdon Union, [1908] A. C. 315; 72 J. P. 305; Hall v. Seisdon Union (1913), 77 J. P. 17.

It is understood that the L. G. B. and their technical advisers much prefer that the local authorities should keep sewage lands in their own hands, on the ground, apparently, that a lessee or tenant is more likely to devote his attention to the production of crops than to the efficient purification of the sewage.

(b) This appears to be a repetition of the proviso to s. 27, ante, p. 88.

Contribution to works under agreement for supply or distribution of sewage.

30. Where any local authority agree with any person (a) as to the supply of sewage and as to works to be made for the purpose of such supply (b), they may contribute to the expense of carrying into execution by such person all or any of the purposes of such agreement, and may become shareholders (c) in any company with which any agreement in relation to the matters aforesaid has been or may hereafter be entered into by such local authority, or to or in which the benefits and obligations of such agreement may have been or may be transferred or vested.

(b) See s. 27 (3), ante, p. 88. This section contemplates the execution of works by the landowner; under s. 27 (3) the execution may be by either party.

(c) This provision was contained in 30 & 31 Vict. c. 113, s. 15; but the consequences might be so complicated that it is not likely to be often adopted. It is difficult to consider the consequences of a local authority being involved in a winding-up suit. On this subject Buckley on Companies, 7th ed., pp. 8, 90, may be referred to. And see also Royal Bank of India's Case (1869), L. R. 4 Ch. 252, as to the liability of a corporate body in respect of shares in a company.

Application of the Improvement of Land Act, 1864, to works for supply of sewage.

31. The making of works of distribution and service for the supply of sewage to lands for agricultural purposes shall be deemed an "improvement of land" authorised by the Improvement of Land Act, 1864, and the provisions of that Act shall apply accordingly.

The provisions of this Act (27 & 28 Vict. c. 114) are too numerous to be set out in this work. It enables owners of limited interests in lands to execute certain improvements (in which by this section sewage works are now included), and to charge the lands with the cost. See also 62 & 63 Vict. c. 46.

*As to Sewage Works without District.Section 32.

32. A local authority shall, three months (a) at least before commencing the construction or extension of any sewer or other work for sewage purposes (b) without their district (c), give notice (d) of the intended work by advertisement in one or more of the local newspapers circulated within the district where the work is to be made.

Notice to be given before commencing sewage works without district.

Such notice shall describe the nature of the intended work, and shall state the intended termini thereof, and the names of the parishes, and the turnpike roads and (e) streets, and other lands (if any) through across under or on which the work is to be made and shall name a place where a plan of the intended work is open for inspection at all reasonable hours; and a copy of such notice shall be served (f) on the owners (g) or reputed owners, lessees or reputed lessees, and occupiers of the said lands, and on the overseers of such parishes, and on the trustees (e), surveyors of highways (h), or other persons having the care of such roads or streets.

(b) The plaintiffs had a sewage farm on the banks of a river. The defendants "Sewage had some sewage works higher up the same stream. The effluent from these works was carried away by a drain, which passed through the plaintiffs' sewage farm, and discharged into a "pool," which communicated with the river by means of a sluice, and, becoming narrower, ultimately formed a backwater into the river. Into this backwater the effluent water from the plaintiffs' sewage farm was discharged. The bottom of the pool being uneven, sewage fungus collected and caused a nuisance. The freeholder commenced proceedings in respect of the nuisance, which were compromised, the defendants agreeing to cleanse the pool and cement the bottom of it. The pool was entirely out of the defendants' district, and partly in the plaintiffs' district. The defendants having commenced their operations without giving any notice under this section, the Court of Appeal held that they were wrong, as the works were "sewage works" within its meaning (Wimbledon L. B. v. Croydon R. S. A. (1886), 32 Ch. D. 421).

(c) The power to construct a sewer without the district is given by s. 16, ante, p. 55. The powers as to other sewage works are contained in s. 27, ante, p. 88.

This section applies even where the consent of the authority of the adjoining district has been obtained under s. 285, post, p. 616 (Jones v. Conway and Colwyn Bay Joint Water Supply Boards, cited in note (g) to s. 16, ante, p. 59). If, however, two or more authorities are combining under s. 285 for the construction of works of common benefit, the L. G. B. hold that notices need not be given unless works are to be constructed in a district outside the jurisdiction of the combining authorities.

Powers of authority and practice of the L. G. B.

When the works beyond the district are of a trifling character and also when it is very desirable to avoid delay, it is sometimes found possible to avoid the giving of notices by arranging with the adjoining authority to carry out the work.

The consent of the owners of the lands traversed will not obviate notices, and they must apparently be given even when the works are to be on the council's own land. In fact there is no way in which compliance with this inconvenient section can be avoided except under the circumstances above.

It may be convenient to set out here the practice of the L. G. B. when proposals come before them for the construction of works of sewerage or sewage disposal beyond the district of a local authority, in connection with an application for sanction to a loan. The Board require the clerk to the authority at the end of the period allowed for the service of objections to furnish a statutory declaration, duly stamped with an impressed stamp, showing that the requirements of the section have been complied with. A copy of the newspaper containing the advertisement, and of the form of notice served on the owners, lessees, and occupiers, and on the overseers and road authorities (if any) (see note (h) below) must be annexed to the declaration as exhibits. The Board also require to be furnished with a copy of any notice of objection which may have been served on the council under s. 33. If no such objection has been made, this must be stated in the declaration, but if any such objection has been made and not withdrawn, the district council must pass a resolution asking the Board to appoint an inspector for the purposes of s. 34 and forward a copy of it to the Board. Under no circumstances will the Board sanction a loan before the time limited by the notices has expired and any objections have been disposed of, and it is only under exceptional circumstances (such as when the works are entirely upon the authority's own land and statutory objections are very improbable) that the Board will consent even to investigate a scheme before the authority are in a position to proceed with the works.

Section 32.

ment.

(d) One advertisement would satisfy the terms of this clause ; but the authority may sometimes deem it advisable to advertise several times. The notice should be signed by the clerk to the authority. See s. 266, post, p. 590. For a form of notice, see the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 566.

Time for
notice.

(e) The words in italics were repealed by the S. L. R. A., 1898.
(f) No time is specified when the notice is to be served, but it is to be implied from the next section that it should be three months before it is proposed to commence the works.

be served.

(g) See the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 8. As to the authentication and service of such copy, see ss. 266, 267, post, p. 590 ; and as to the term reputed owners, see note on s. 176, post, p. 421, and note (b) on p. 948, post.

A council constructed a sewer under the bed of a goit without giving notice under this section to the defendant, who either owned the goit, or had an easement in it for the supply of water to his mill. He thereupon dug down to, broke and plugged the sewer. It was held that his interest in the goit, being an easement, came within the definition of "lands" in s. 4, ante, p. 7, even if he was not the actual owner ; and that the council had therefore no authority to carry the sewer under the goit without notice to him ; but the defendant having cut the sewer and thereby caused great inconvenience and risk of disease to the public, costs were refused. It was further held that he was within his right in counterclaiming for damages, as the council by resisting his title had given him no opportunity of agreeing upon damages (Cleckheaton U. D. C. v. Firth (1898), 62 J. P. 536).

(h) It will be remembered that in both urban and rural districts the council is the surveyor of highways for the purposes of this section. See s. 144, post, p. 251, and s. 25 (1) of the L. G. A., 1894. If a sewer is to pass under a main road, the maintenance of which is in the hands of the county council, notice should be served upon that council. See s. 11 (12) of the L. G. A., 1888.

In case of objection, works not to be commenced with-
of L. G. B.

33. If any such owner, lessee, or occupier, or any such overseer, trustee (a), surveyor, or other person as aforesaid, or any other owner, lessee, or occupier who would be affected by the intended work, objects to such work, and serves notice in writing of such objection on the local authority (b) at any time within the said three months, the intended work shall not be commenced without the sanction of the Local Government Board after such inquiry as herein-after mentioned (c), unless such objection is withdrawn.

(b) The notice should be addressed to the authority, but may, as it seems, be in general terms. For a form of notice, see the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 567. If there be no objection, no reference to the L. G. B. will be necessary unless a loan is required, as to which see s. 233, post, p. 519.

(c) See ss. 32 and 34, and the notes thereto.

34. The Local Government Board may, on application of the local authority, appoint an inspector to make inquiry (a) on the spot (b) into the propriety of the intended work and into the objections thereto, and to report to the Local Government Board on the matters with respect to which such inquiry was directed, and on receiving the report of such inspector, the Local Government Board may make an order disallowing or allowing, with such modifications (if any) as they may deem necessary, the intended work.

Section 34.

Inspector to hold inquiry and report to the L. G. B.

(a) See, as to this, s. 293, post, p. 622. These inquiries are usually combined with an inquiry into a loan application. The application should be made by the clerk, and should be accompanied by a copy of the resolution directing it. See note (c) to s. 32. For a form of application, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 568.

(b) The procedure will probably consist of an inquiry at the offices of the council, and a visit by the inspector to the locus in quo.

PRIVIES, WATER-CLOSETS, ETC.

35. It shall not be lawful newly to erect any house (a), or to rebuild any house pulled down to or below the ground floor (b), without a sufficient (c) water-closet earth-closet or privy and an ashpit (d) furnished with proper doors and coverings.

Penalty on building houses without privy accommodation.

Any person who causes any house to be erected or rebuilt in contravention of this enactment shall be liable to a penalty (e) not exceeding twenty pounds.

This section must be read subject to ss. 39—42 of the P. H. A., 1907, post, p. 1118, where those sections are in force.

(a) See note on s. 4, ante, p. 20.

(b) See s. 159, post, p. 359.

(c) In case of dispute the justices will decide as to what is or is not sufficient upon the evidence. P. built two cottages with one privy, which was found, as a fact, to be sufficient for the use of the occupiers of both cottages. It was held that he had complied with the requirements of this section, on the ground that it does not require a separate water-closet, earth-closet, or privy for every individual house built or rebuilt (R. v. Clutton Union or Clutton Union v. Pointing (1879), 4 Q. B. D. 340; 43 J. P. 686). See, however, the next section and the proviso thereto; and generally as to sanitary conveniences used in common, see P. H. A., 1890, s. 21, post, p. 836.

(d) The expression "ashpit" includes any ashtub or other receptacle for the deposit of ashes, fæcal matter, or refuse (P. H. A., 1890, s. 11, post, p. 823).

The words "furnished with proper doors and coverings" appear to refer to a water-closet, earth-closet, and privy, as well as to an ashpit (Clerkenwell Vestry v. Feary (1890), 24 Q. B. D. 703; 54 J. P. 676).

(e) See, as to the recovery of this penalty, s. 251, post, p. 550.

36. If a house within the district of a local authority appears to (a) such authority by the report of their surveyor or inspector of nuisances (b) to be without a sufficient (c) water-closet earth-closet or privy and an ashpit furnished with proper doors and coverings, the local authority shall (d), by written notice (e), require the owner or occupier (f) of the house, within a reasonable time therein specified, to provide a sufficient water-closet earth-closet or privy and an ashpit furnished as aforesaid, or either of them as the case may require (g).

Power of local authority to enforce privy accommodation for houses.

Section 36.

If such notice is not complied with, the local authority may (h), at the expiration of the time specified in the notice, do the work thereby required to be done, and may recover in a summary manner (i) from the owner (k) the expenses incurred by them in so doing, or may by order declare the same to be private improvement expenses (l): Provided that where a water-closet earth-closet or privy has been and is used in common by the inmates of two or more houses, or if in the opinion of the local authority a water-closet earth-closet or privy may be so used, they need not (m) require the same to be provided for each house.

This section must now be read subject to ss. 39—42 of the P. H. A., 1907, post, pp. 1118—1121, where those sections are in force.

Inspector of nuisances.

(a) These words make the authority the judge of the sufficiency of the existing accommodation, subject to an appeal to the L. G. B. under s. 268. The justices cannot try the question (Robinson v. Sunderland Corporation (No. 2), [1899] 1 Q. B. 751; 63 J. P. 341).

Discretion and powers of local authority.

(b) This officer is introduced here for the first time. It should here be noticed that under s. 191, post, p. 454, a medical officer of health may exercise any of the powers with which an inspector of nuisances is invested by this Act. A form of report will be found in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 503.

Each case to be considered on its merits.

(c) Though the officer is to report, the authority are to determine as to the sufficiency of the convenience. It was decided that a district board under the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, where there is a clause identical with the above, could not lay down any general rule prescribing the use of privies, and requiring water-closets to be erected in the place of privies, in compliance with such general rule, and not with reference to the particular circumstances of the case. Where, therefore, the board were proceeding in accordance with such rule to erect water-closets in default of the owner, it was held that their proceedings could not be supported (Tinkler v. Wandsworth District Board of Works (1858), 27 L. J. Ch. 342; 22 J. P. 223); and this decision was followed in Wood v. Widnes Corporation, [1898] 1 Q. B. 463; 62 J. P. 117. On November 20th a report as to insufficiency of sanitary appliances was presented at a meeting of the "Unhealthy Dwellings Sub-Committee" of a municipal corporation; the sub-committee thereupon resolved to instruct their surveyor to prepare plans of the work required, and to request the property owners to attend the meeting at which such plans would be considered. On November 28th, at a meeting of the sanitary committee, the minutes of the sub-committee were read and adopted without discussion. On December 5th, at a meeting of the council, the proceedings of the sanitary committee were read and approved without discussion. Subsequently, the sub-committee resolved to recommend that notices specifying the necessary improvements be served on the various owners; and this resolution was adopted without discussion by the sanitary committee, and the clerk was ordered to serve the notices. The minutes of the sanitary committee were then adopted without discussion by the council. It was held (distinguishing Wood v. Widnes Corporation, supra) that there was evidence to justify a finding of fact that the order was made after separate consideration of each case (Agnew v. Manchester Corporation (1902), 67 J. P. 174; 1 L. G. R. 9; cf. Robinson v. Sunderland Corporation (No. 1), infra). As to acts and orders of a sub-committee ultimately approved by a committee and by the council, see also Bower v. Caistor R. D. C. (1911), 75 J. P. 186; 9 L. G. R. 448.

Conversion of privies into water-closets.

The L. G. B. expressed the opinion (prior to the passing of the P. H. A., 1907) that in the absence of special local Act provisions an authority had no power to incur expense in attempting to induce owners to undertake a general substitution of water-closets for privies. The Board considered that whatever the authority might do to bring about a change of system must be as part of a regular procedure in particular cases either under s. 36 or the nuisance provisions of the Act (ss. 91 et seq.), and that it was only under such circumstances, and upon default of an owner or owners, that expense might be incurred under the Act of 1875. In order to give an authority greater latitude in the way of procuring a general conversion of privies into water-closets, clauses are sometimes inserted in local Acts or Provisional Orders. These clauses for the most part follow a model series, the meaning and effect of which was considered in Bootle Corporation v. Owens (1898), 66 J. P. 357; 87 L. T. 74. See also Agnew v. Manchester Corporation, supra, and Smith v. Greenwood, [1907] 2 K. B. 385; 71 J. P. 353, where it was held under local Acts that, so long as each case was separately considered, there was power to require water-closets to be substituted for privies.

When an authority have decided that the existing accommodation is in a particular case insufficient, they have power to order what kind of accommodation must be provided, for the section gives them power to order the providing of a "sufficient water-closet earth-closet or privy and an ashpit, . . . or either of them as the case may require" (St. Luke (Vestry of) v. Lewis (1862), 26 J. P. 262; 1 B. & S. 865). In R. v. Sherborne L. B., Times, March 20th, 1880; S. C., sub nom., Bogle v. Sherborne L. B. (1880), 46 J. P. 675, the defendant was the owner of several houses, each of which had a water-closet. The water-closets had no flushing apparatus, and were flushed by pouring water from pails. The surveyor of the local board having reported that the water-closets were insufficient, the board gave notice to B. to provide sufficient water-closets, and, on his failing to do so, executed the necessary works, and proceeded to recover the expenses from B. It was held that the justices were right in refusing to hear evidence as to the necessity of the work done; it was for the board to determine, on the report of the surveyor, whether the water-closets were sufficient, subject only to the right of appeal to the L. G. B. under s. 268; and the duty of the justices in enforcing payment of the expenses incurred was purely ministerial. LUSH, J., said: "I do not say that there may not be water-closets in certain localities, and under certain circumstances, which would be sufficient without a flushing apparatus by way of a cistern or otherwise; but on the other hand, it is quite obvious that there may be a water-closet which, under other circumstances, though a water-closet, is not sufficient, and it is for the local board to form their opinion. They know the locality, and the condition of the houses and the neighbourhood, and it is for them to form a judgment whether the report represents the water-closets as being inefficient for the purposes of the Act. It is quite clear that the local board took that view, because, immediately upon this, they gave a notice, resting upon the report of their surveyor, that the water-closets were insufficient by reason of their not being provided with cisterns and flushing apparatus. If that be so, I think it is quite enough to justify them in forming their opinion on the matter; therefore, we have no authority to interfere." And see, per POLLOCK, B., in Ex parte Whitechurch (1881), 6 Q. B. D. 545; 45 J. P. 617. In a subsequent case it was held that an authority had power under this section, upon being satisfied that a house was without a sufficient privy, to require the owner (subject to his right to appeal to the L. G. B. under s. 268) to provide a sufficient water-closet in the place of the existing privy (Nicholl v. Epping U. D. C., [1899] 1 Ch. 844; 63 J. P. 341). See also Sutcliffe v. Sowerby Bridge U. D. C., infra, and Meyrick v. Pembroke Corporation (1912), 76 J. P. 36; 510 L. G. R. 710). A dictum apparently to the contrary in Smith v. Greenwood, supra, at [1907] 2 K. B. 389, 390, must, semble, be disregarded.

An authority, having decided that a water-closet is necessary, must not dictate to the owner what kind of water-closet he is to provide (Wood v. Widnes Corporation, supra). An authority served on an owner a notice that, as his house was without a sufficient water-closet, he was "to provide a sufficient water-closet to the said house according to the specification given by this notice"; then followed the usual notice that if the work was not done the authority would enter and do it, and a specification of the kind of water-closet to be put in. In an action for an injunction to restrain the authority from entering, it was held, that the notice was bad on the ground that it did not allow the owner to comply with it by providing any other "sufficient" water-closet than that specified, although it was not given in pursuance of a general resolution without regard to the particular requirements (Robinson v. Sunderland Corporation (No. 1), (1898), 62 J. P. 216; 78 L. T. 194). In this case it was suggested that the notice might be bad also for leaving out the words "earth-closet or privy," which, according to s. 36, the premises should be without before the notice can be given. In Sutcliffe v. Sowerby Bridge U. D. C. (1909), 73 J. P. 385; 100 L. T. 967, the appellant's premises were furnished with privies and a midden, but not with water-closets. An intimation had been given calling her attention to the insufficiency of the system, and asking her to provide suitable water-closets and ashbins in place of the existing privies and midden. She declined to put in water-closets, but was willing to put in tub closets. Notice was then served requiring her, as the houses were without sufficient "water-closets, ashpits and ashbins," to provide sufficient water-closets, ashpits and ashbins. It was held that although it said nothing about the insufficiency of the existing "privies," it was a sufficient notice. See also Meyrick v. Pembroke Corporation, supra, for a decision as to the sufficiency of a notice. In such a case the remedy of the plaintiff is not by appeal to the L. G. B. under s. 268 of the P. H. A., 1875; appeals to that body lie in cases where the question arises as to sufficiency (Robinson v. Sunderland Corporation (No. 1) (1898), 62 J. P. 216; 78 L. T. 194).

As to the enforcing of the provision of privy accommodation in houses let in lodgings, see s. 90, post, p. 158.

For the definition of an ashpit, and the application of the words "furnished with proper doors and coverings," see note (d) to the preceding section.

(d) This is a duty imposed upon the local authorities, and applies to each class of authority.

(e) See ss. 266 and 267, post, p. 590, as to authentication and service. For a form of notice, see Nicholl v. Epping U. D. C., [1899] 1 Ch. 844, and also the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 504.

(f) See s. 306, under which the owner may be empowered to enter to do these works when the occupier prevents him.

(g) See note (c), supra.

Jurisdiction
of justices and Local Government Board.

(h) This proceeding is permissive, not obligatory. If the local authority apply to justices under s. 305 for an order entitling them to enter and do the work, the justices cannot consider evidence as to the sufficiency of the existing sanitary arrangements, the only appeal on this point being that to the L. G. B. under s. 268, post, p. 592 (Robinson v. Sunderland Corporation (No. 2), [1899] 1 Q. B. 751; 63 J. P. 341). There is also a dictum to the effect that if in obedience to a notice an owner does certain work not considered sufficient by the authority, the justices cannot go into its sufficiency (Sutcliffe v. Sowerby Bridge U. D. C., supra, per Lord ALVERSTONE, C.J.); but the case there cited for the proposition (Robinson v. Sunderland Corporation (No. 2)) does not appear to support the dictum. The justices can consider whether the notice is regular in form (Sutcliffe v. Sowerby Bridge U. D. C., supra).

expenses.

(i) See s. 251, and note (e) to s. 21, ante, p. 80. Justices, when enforcing payment of these expenses, act ministerially only. They cannot enter into the consideration of whether the accommodation existing before the notice was insufficient or not. If the notice was valid, the justices have no alternative but to order payment. The only method of questioning the propriety of the local authority's decision is by appeal to the L. G. B. under s. 268, post, p. 592) (R. v. Sherborne L. B. v. St. Luke's (Vestry of) v. Lewis, supra, and cases in preceding note. And see also Hargreaves v. Taylor (1863), 27 J. P. 325; 3 B. & S. 613; St. John, Hackney (Vestry of) v. Hutton, [1897] 1 Q. B. 210; 61 J. P. 54).

W. was required by an authority to do certain work under s. 36, and on her default they did the work themselves. Payment of the expenses was demanded by a written notice signed by the authority's rating surveyor, whose duty it was to sign all notices demanding payment of such expenses. On the authority taking proceedings to recover the expenses, it was objected that the notice required authentication, and therefore ought to have been signed by their clerk, surveyor, or inspector of nuisances. It was held that the rating surveyor was a proper person to make the demand; that the notice did not require authentication within the meaning of s. 266, and that therefore the signature referred to in that section was not necessary (Willis v. Rotherham Corporation (1911), 75 J. P. 421; 105 L. T. 436).

The owner of eight houses was summoned by the respondents for £5 9s. 9d., expenses incurred by them in putting an earth-closet in each of four of the houses. The respondents had given notice to the owner to provide four of the houses with a sufficient closet, but he did not do the work, and it was done to five of the houses by the respondents; no notice having been given in respect of one of the houses, it was admitted that the respondents had no right to do the work at it. The expense of the work at the five houses amounted to £6 17s. 2d., and the respondents deducted one-fifth for the house in respect of which no notice had been given, leaving a sum of £5 9s. 9d. Their surveyor had certified that he had "settled and apportioned" the sum payable by the owner in respect of the work at the four houses to be £1 7s. 5½d. per house, making a total of £5 9s. 9d., the sum claimed, and notice to that effect was given to the owner. It was held that the division of the expenses was not a settlement and apportionment within the meaning of s. 257. post, p. 566, since it was not an apportionment between different owners, but merely a division of the expenses between the council and the owner, and that therefore the respondents were not bound, before taking proceedings, to wait until three months after the service of notice of the so-called "settlement and apportionment" (Bower v. Caistor R. D. C. (1911), 75 J. P. 186; 9 L. G. R. 448).

Note to
Section 36.

(k) Though the notice may be given to the owner or occupier, these expenses are to be recovered from the owner, who is defined in s. 4, ante, p. 8. He may appeal against the order to the L. G. B. under s. 268, post, p. 592.

(m) It will be observed that the previous part of the section rendered it incumbent upon the authority to require a sufficient water-closet or privy to be made, and, therefore, though this proviso removes this compulsion in this particular case, it does not prevent them from making the requisition when they think proper to do so. The authority are the sole judges of the insufficiency under this section. At the same time it must be remembered that one privy may be sufficient for two houses, so as to protect the owners from liability to the penalty under s. 35. The two sections are entirely distinct (per COCKBURN, C.J., in R. v. Clutton Union or Clutton Union v. Pointing, ante, p. 95).

Accommodation common to two houses.

The owner of a house in Ireland let the ground and first floors to two tenants as separate tenements; the only water-closet and sanitary accommodation for both tenants was in the yard, and could only be reached by going through the living rooms on the ground floor. On the owner being charged for that a nuisance existed on the premises occupied by the tenant on the first floor, on account of "the premises so occupied being in such a state to be a nuisance and injurious to health by reason of same having no water-closet or other sanitary accommodation, and that said nuisance was caused by his act or default," the magistrates, having found as a question of fact that "there was sufficient accommodation for both tenants, and that the tenant of the first floor had unrestricted access to the yard through the kitchen on the ground floor, dismissed the case on the merits, being of opinion that the defendant was not bound in law to supply a separate water-closet and sanitary accommodation for the exclusive use of each of the two tenants." It was held that the justices were right (Belfast Corporation v. Thompson (1908), 42 Ir. L. T. 215).

37. Any enactment in force within the district of any local authority requiring the construction of a water-closet shall be deemed to be satisfied by the construction, with the approval of the local authority, of an earth-closet. As to earth-closets.

Any local authority may, as respects any house in which any earth-closet is in use with their approval, dispense with the supply of water required by any contract or enactment to be furnished to any water-closet in such house, on such terms as may be agreed on between such authority and the person providing or required to provide such supply of water.

Section 37. Any local authority may themselves undertake or contract (a) with any person to undertake a supply of dry earth or other deodorising substance to any house within their district for the purpose of any earth-closet.

In this Act the term "earth-closet" includes (b) any place for the reception and deodorisation of fœcal matter constructed to the satisfaction of the local authority.

Privy accommodation for factories.

38. (a) Where it appears to any local authority by the report of their surveyor (b) that any house (c) is used or intended to be used as a factory or building in which persons of both sexes are employed or intended to be employed at one time in any manufacture trade or business, the local authority may, if they think fit, by written notice (d) require the owner or occupier (e) of such house, within the time therein specified, to construct a sufficient (f) number of water-closets earth-closets or privies and ashpits for the separate use of each sex.

Any person who neglects or refuses to comply with any such notice shall be liable for each default to a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds and to a further penalty not exceeding forty shillings for every day during which the default is continued (g).

Later statutory provisions.

(a) Where s. 39 and the following sections of the P. H. A., 1907 (relating to closet accommodation), have been applied to any district, increased powers are given to a local authority.

Where this section remains in force, it is supplemented as to factories and workshops by s. 9 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, in App. I., post, p. 1992. Where, however, s. 22 of the P. H. A., 1890, is in force, the present section is repealed by sub-s. (4) thereof, and s. 9 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, does not apply.

As to coal mines, "general regulations" are to be made by the Home Secretary with respect to the provision and use of sanitary conveniences therein both above and below ground (Coal Mines Act, 1911, ss. 76, 86). As to the sanitary arrangements of public elementary schools reference may be made to a Memorandum of the L. G. B., dated February, 1910.

Duties of factory inspectors.

(b) In this section the surveyor only is referred to. His report will not conclude the authority; they have a discretion whether to act or not. A form of report will be found in Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 505. By s. 5 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, where it appears to an inspector under that Act that any act, neglect, or default, in relation to any drain, water-closet, earth-closet, privy, ashpit, water supply, nuisance or other matter in a factory or workshop, is punishable or remediable under the law relating to public health and not under that Act, the inspector shall give notice in writing of such act, neglect, or default to the district council in whose district the factory or workshop is situate, and it shall be the duty of the district council to make such inquiry into the subject of the notice, and take such action thereon as to that council may seem proper for the purpose of enforcing the law, and to inform the inspector of the proceedings taken in consequence of the notice. The inspector may, for the purposes of this section, take with him into a factory or workshop, a medical officer of health, inspector of nuisances, or other officer of the district council. It is further provided by the same section that where notice of an act, neglect, or default, is given by an inspector under this section to a district council, and proceedings are not taken within one month for punishing or remedying the act, neglect, or default, the inspector may take the like proceedings for punishing or remedying the same as the district council might have taken; and shall be entitled to recover from the district council all such expenses in and about the proceedings as the inspector incurs, and as are not recovered from any other person, and have not been incurred in any unsuccessful proceedings. This section does not, however, take away the power of the local authority to act on the report of their surveyor. See, also, the provisions of the Act of 1901, ss. 97—102, as to bakehouses, in Appendix I., post, p. 1999.

(c) See the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 20.

(d) See ss. 266 and 267, as to service and authentication of notices. For a form of notice, see the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 506.

(e) Under this section the occupier may be required to execute the works, as the occupier of a factory may be quite competent to attend to this complaint, and may be the proper person to remedy it.

(f) The authority may properly specify the number which they think sufficient, but their decision will not conclude the question if the owner or occupier construct what he considers sufficient and the justices concur. Compare this section with the provisions of s. 36, and see notes to that section, ante, pp. 96—99. It is also to be noticed that, though the previous section applies to such a house as is herein described, it only requires a sufficient water-closet to be supplied. This section requires separate privies for the two sexes.

(g) As to the recovery of this penalty, see s. 251, post, p. 550.

39. Any urban authority may, if they think fit, provide and maintain, in proper and convenient situations (a), urinals water-closets earth-closets privies and ashpits (b), and other similar conveniences (c) for public accommodation.

Public
necessaries.

(a) In Biddulph v. St. George's, Hanover Square (Vestry of) (1863), 33 L. J. Ch. 411; 8 L. T. 558, the defendants assuming to act under the corresponding section of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, resolved to erect a urinal in Grosvenor Place, adjacent to the wall of Buckingham Place. STUART, V.-C., being of opinion that the erection of a urinal at that spot would be a serious injury to the neighbouring property, upon bill filed by a resident nearly opposite to the proposed site, granted an interlocutory injunction restraining the vestry from erecting it. Upon appeal the Lords Justices, being of opinion that the evidence did not show that the proposed urinal would be in point of law a nuisance, or that the vestry were exceeding their statutory powers in what they proposed to do, or that they were influenced by improper motives, discharged the order. This decision was followed upon an interlocutory motion by STIRLING, J., in Mogg v. Bocken (1888), 5 T. L. R. 22. In Mason v. Wallasey L. B. (1876), 58 J. P. 477, JESSEL, M.R., held that in the absence of improper motives an absolute discretion was given to the authority in choosing the site. And see the decision of POLLOCK, B., in Spicer v. Margate Corporation (1880), 24 Sol. J. 821. But while the authority have a discretion, they will be controlled by the court if they act in an unreasonable manner by erecting a urinal where it would be a nuisance to the owners of adjoining property (Vernon v. Vestry of St. James', Westminster (1880), 16 Ch. D. 449), inasmuch as the words used in the section are "proper and convenient"; and see Graham v. Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation (No. 1) (1892), 67 L. T. 260, 790, a case of a covenant to keep a space "open and unbuilt upon." Each case will, therefore, depend on its own circumstances.

Where a local board assuming to act under this section erected a urinal partly upon a highway and partly upon a strip of land belonging to the plaintiff and so near to other adjoining land of her's as to be a nuisance to her and to her tenants, and to depreciate the value of her property, it was held that she was entitled to an injunction to restrain the board from continuing the urinal upon her land or so near thereto as to cause injury or annoyance to her and her tenants. It was held also that it was not a matter in which notice of action under s. 264 (now repealed) was required, nor was compensation under s. 308 the proper remedy (Sellors v. Matlock Bath L. B. (1885), 14 Q. B. D. 928). This case was followed in Parish v. London Corporation (1901), 67 J. P. 55; 18 T. L. R. 63, and in Leyman v. Hesse

Section 39.

U. D. C. (1902), 67 J. P. 56 ; 19 T. L. R. 73, where a urinal erected twelve feet from the entrance gates of the plaintiff's house and grounds was ordered to be removed because, by reason of its position and construction, it would be a serious annoyance to the plaintiff and those inhabiting his house. In another case, plaintiff was the owner of high-class houses overlooking a public park, and the authority resolved to erect a urinal and lavatory in the park, about 230 feet from his nearest house, and in full view of them all. Plaintiff moved for an injunction to restrain them from erecting the proposed building so as to cause a nuisance to himself and his tenants, and proved that the letting value of his houses would be diminished, and that there were other sites more convenient, but failed to prove that any nuisance by smell was likely to arise. CHITTY, J., held that an injunction ought not to be granted in the absence of evidence of bad faith or arbitrary, perverse and vexatious conduct in selecting the site (Pethick v. Plymouth Corporation (1894), 58 J. P. 476 ; 70 L. T. 304). Again, where it was proposed to erect a lavatory for women close to the plaintiffs' property at a seaside resort, and it appeared that the roof of the lavatory and its approaches, but not the entrance to it, would be visible from the plaintiffs' house, it was held upon the particular facts that the lavatory was required ; that it was to be in a proper and convenient situation ; that it would not be a nuisance, either public or private ; and that although it might prove detrimental to the property of the plaintiffs, yet as the authority had acted reasonably and bonâ fide an injunction must be refused (Mayo v. Seaton U. D. C. (1903), 68 J. P. 7 ; 2 L. G. R. 127). For a recent case in which an authority submitted to an injunction in respect of a urinal in a passage adjoining a ladies' club, see Halcyon Club, Ltd. v. Westminster Corporation (1912), Times, November 14th, 16th. (The principle laid down in the above cases may be compared with that involved in Goldberg v. Liverpool Corporation (1900), 82 L. T. 362, and Chaplin v. Westminster Corporation, [1901] 2 Ch. 329 ; 65 J. P. 661 ; and see Escott v. Newport Corporation, [1904] 2 K. B. 369 ; 68 J. P. 135).

Conveniences
in and under highways.

It appears from the judgment of LUSH, J., in Vernon v. St. James', Westminster (Vestry of), supra, that under this section a urinal may be erected upon a highway. In such a case it is unnecessary to proceed under ss. 84 et seq. of the Highway Act, 1835, for the powers of the authority include the power of depriving the public of their right to traverse the highway to the extent of the encroachment. The authority are also entitled to excavate the soil of the highway to a reasonable extent for the purpose of constructing an overground convenience.

By a local Act a municipal corporation were empowered to erect in any street or public place or on land belonging to them, water-closets, urinals, and lavatories for the use of the public, and the word "street" in that Act had the same meaning as in the Public Health Acts. The corporation made in a public promenade, which was by another local Act free and open for public use, but was not a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, certain water-closets, urinals, and lavatories, sunk to a depth of nine feet, and lighted by skylights level with the surface of the ground. The Court of Appeal held that, though the promenade was a public place, still as nothing had been dedicated to the use of the public except the surface, the soil under the surface could not be considered part of a public place or street within the meaning of the local Act, and that the corporation were not entitled to erect the conveniences in question (Baird v. Tunbridge Wells Corporation, [1894] 2 Q. B. 867). On appeal, the House of Lords held that, even assuming the place to be a "street," the subsoil was not vested in the corporation, and that therefore they had no power to excavate the soil and erect lavatories below the surface of the street (Tunbridge Wells Corporation v. Baird, [1896] A. C. 434 ; 60 J. P. 788). See now s. 47 of the Act of 1907, infra.

In London it is provided by s. 44 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, that for the purpose of making public conveniences where they may deem them to be suitable, the subsoil of any road, exclusive of the footway adjoining any building or the curtilage of a building, shall be vested in the sanitary authority. It was held that in the absence of any bad faith this section empowered an authority to make underground approaches to such conveniences from either side of the street in the nature of a subway, although such subway might be used by persons not using the conveniences (Westminster Corporation v. L. & N. W.

Rail. Co., [1905] A. C. 426 ; 69 J. P. 425). Section 45 of the same Act empowers an authority to let public lavatories. A metropolitan borough council constructed and maintained public underground lavatories beneath streets, and it was held by the Court of Appeal (MATHEW, L.J., dissenting) that the council were liable for land tax in respect thereof as "having or holding a tenement or hereditament" (Westminster Corporation v. Johnson; Westminster Corporation v. Fuller, [1904] 2 K. B. 737 ; 68 J. P. 549). And as to land tax on a "tube" railway beneath a street, cf. Central London Rail. Co. v. City of London Land Tax Commissioners, [1913] A. C. 364 ; 77 J. P. 289.

Note to

By s. 47 of the P. H. A., 1907 (if declared by the L. G. B. to be in force in any district, and subject to such conditions or adaptations as may be specified in the Order of the Board) : "The local authority may provide and maintain in proper and convenient situations sanitary conveniences in or under any street repairable by the inhabitants at large, and may provide and maintain in proper and convenient situations lavatories in or under any such street for the use of the public, and may employ and pay attendants and make reasonable charges for the use of any sanitary conveniences (other than a urinal) or of any lavatory so provided. The local authority may make byelaws for the management of the sanitary conveniences and lavatories, and as to the conduct of persons frequenting the same. The local authority may let any such sanitary conveniences and any such lavatories for such periods, at such rents, and subject to such conditions as to the charges to be made for the use thereof and otherwise, as they think proper."

Conveniences and lavatories may, under s. 47 of the Act of 1907, be provided in or under streets repairable by the inhabitants. It is to be noticed, however, that the section does not vest the subsoil of the street in the authority for the purpose of this provision. Cf. s. 44 (2) of the London Act, supra, and Westminster Corporation v. L. & N. W. Rail. Co., supra, decided thereunder. Consequently, the case of Tunbridge Wells Corporation v. Baird, supra, would appear to show that an authority must, if required, pay for the use of the subsoil of the street. It will be seen also that s. 47, supra, allows sanitary conveniences and lavatories to be let. Cf. s. 45 of the London Act, supra, and the cases of Westminster Corporation v. Johnson and Westminster Corporation v. Fuller cited in connection therewith.

As to the power of an urban authority to make regulations and byelaws for the Regulations, management and use of public sanitary conveniences, and to make charges for the etc. use of water-closets in districts where the P. H. A., 1890, has been adopted, see s. 20 of that Act, post, p. 835. See also s. 47 of the P. H. A., 1907, supra, as to the power to make byelaws and to make charges for the use of sanitary conveniences (other than urinals) and lavatories.

Under certain circumstances an urban authority may erect a public sanitary con- Conveniences venience on a site beyond the boundary of their district. The site must, however, outside be convenient to residents within the district, and the authority clearly have no district. power to encroach upon a highway in an adjoining district.

H. A., 1890, for powers under ibid., s. 20 (see, however, supra, as to powers obtainable under the Act of 1907). The Board readily grant these powers in regard to the parish or parishes in which action is proposed, if they are assured that suitable sites have been or can be secured, and proper facilities exist for drainage and a supply of water. The expenses are usually declared in the order to be chargeable as special expenses.

(b) See the definition of ashpit in s. 11 of the P. H. A., 1890.

(c) See note to s. 45 as to this term being held to include refuse tips under certain circumstances.

40. Every local authority shall (a) provide that all drains water- Drains, closets earth-closets privies ashpits and cesspools within their district privies, etc., to be properly kept.

Section 40. be constructed and kept so as not to be a nuisance or injurious to health.

(a) There is no provision in the Act, unless s. 299, post, p. 629, applies, for compelling performance of this duty.

Examination of drains, privies, etc., on complaint of nuisance.

41. On the written application of any person (a) to a local authority, stating that any drain (b) water-closet earth-closet privy ashpit or cesspool on or belonging to any premises within their district is a nuisance (c) or injurious to health (but not otherwise) (d), the local authority may, by writing (e), empower their surveyor or inspector of nuisances, after twenty-four hours written notice (f) to the occupier of such premises, or in case of emergency (g) without notice, to enter (h) such premises, with or without assistants, and cause the ground to be opened, and examine such drain water-closet earth-closet privy ashpit or cesspool. If the drain water-closet earth-closet privy ashpit or cesspool on examination be found to be in a proper condition, he shall cause the ground to be closed, and any damage done to be made good as soon as can be, and the expenses of the works shall be defrayed by the local authority. If the drain water-closet earth-closet privy ashpit or cesspool on examination shall appear to be in bad condition, or to require alteration or amendment (i), the local authority shall forthwith cause notice in writing (k) to be given to the owner or occupier (l) of the premises requiring him forthwith or within a reasonable time (m) therein specified to do the necessary works; and if such notice is not complied with, the person to whom it is given shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding ten shillings for every day during which he continues to make default (n), and the local authority may, if they think fit, execute such works, and may recover in a summary manner from the owner the expenses (o) incurred by them in so doing, or may by order declare the same to be private improvement expenses (p).

Additional powers under P. H. A., 1907.

Additional powers for the testing of drains may be obtained by the application in any district of the P. H. A., 1907, s. 45.

By s. 46 of the same Act additional powers in connection with cesspools, ash-pits, etc., wells or disused wells, may be obtained. See also s. 34 of the same Act, referred to in note (d), infra.

Who may apply.

(a) The written application required by s. 41, supra, need not necessarily proceed from some person other than the authority's surveyor or inspector of nuisances (Wood Green U. D. C. v. Joseph, [1907] 1 K. B. 182; 71 J. P. 89). This case was affirmed in both the Court of Appeal and the House of Lords, the point for which it is now cited not being seriously contested. For a form of application, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 542.

"Single private drains."

(b) See the definition of a "drain" in s. 4, ante, p. 24. For the purposes of this section the expression has an extended meaning in districts where s. 19 of the P. H. A., 1890, is in force. By that section: "(1) Where two or more houses belonging to different owners are connected with a public sewer by a single private drain, an application may be made under section forty-one of the Public Health Act, 1875 (relating to complaints as to nuisances from drains), and the local authority may recover any expenses incurred by them in executing any works under the powers conferred on them by that section from the owners of the houses in such shares and proportions as shall be settled by their surveyor or (in case of dispute) by a court of summary jurisdiction; (2) Such expenses may be recovered summarily or may be declared by the urban authority to be private improvement expenses under the Public Health Acts, and may be recovered accordingly; (3) For the purposes of this section the expression 'drain' includes a drain used for the drainage of more than one building." See this section and the notes thereto, post, p. 831. Note to Section 41.

(c) From the construction which has been placed on similar language in ss. 47, Nuisance or 91, it may be inferred that if the nuisance complained of consists of something injurious offensive to the senses, it is not necessary that it should also be injurious to health. to health. See Malton Urban Sanitary Authority v. Malton Farmers' Manure Co. (1879), 4 Ex. D. 302; 44 J. P. 155; Banbury L. B. v. Page (1881), 8 Q. B. D. 97; 46 J. P. 184; Bishop Auckland L. B. v. Bishop Auckland Iron Co. (1882), 10 Q. B. D. 138; 47 J. P. 389). See as to the liability of an owner or occupier for damage done by the escape of sewage in consequence of a defective drain on his premises, Humphries v. Cousins (1877), 2 C. P. D. 239; 41 J. P. 280; Holland v. Lazarus (1897), 66 L. J. Q. B. 285; 61 J. P. 262.

(d) Where s. 34 of the P. H. A., 1907, has been applied to any district, s. 41, supra, is to have effect as if for the words "but not otherwise" there were substituted the words "or when on the report in writing of their surveyor or inspector of nuisances the local authority have reason to suspect that any such drain, water-closet, earth-closet, privy, ashpit or cesspool is a nuisance or injurious to health."

(e) This might be under the hand of the clerk, and a notice of the authority Notices. entered on the council's minutes, or it might be under the seal of the council. See a form in Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 543.

(f) Query, who is to give this notice? Apparently either the clerk, or surveyor, or inspector of nuisances, under the direction of the authority. As to the authentication and service of the notice, see ss. 266, 267, post, p. 590. A form of notice will be found in Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 543.

The giving of this notice is not a condition precedent to the right of the authority to recover expenses incurred in remedying a nuisance (Bromley Borough Council v. Cheshire, [1908] 1 K. B. 680; 72 J. P. 34).

(g) The authority will determine in the first place whether there is a case of "Emergency, but, semble, this might be disputed in an action for trespass. There gency." should be an entry on the minutes to the effect that the particular case is one of emergency.

(h) Whether, if admission be refused, a penalty is incurred for "obstructing" the officer unless he has obtained a justice's order, see 77 J. P. N. 325, 556. Power of entry.

(i) The section applies to every case where the fact that a drain is in bad condition, or requires alteration and amendment, causes the drain to be a nuisance or injurious to health, even though the alteration or amendment necessary to abate the nuisance may involve an alteration of the structure, and in places where the P. H. A., 1890, is in force, s. 19 of that Act applies the section to the same extent to every drain which is a "single private drain" (Southwold Corporation v. Crowdy (1903), 67 J. P. 278; 1 L. G. R. 899, distinguishing Fulham (Vestry of) v. Solomon, [1896] 1 Q. B. 198; 60 J. P. 72). In the latter case, KENNEDY, J., had said: "In my view, the words 'is found not to be in proper order or condition' in s. 40 (2), and 'appears to be in bad order or condition' in s. 41 (2) of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, do not refer to defects in the structure; nor do the words 'require alteration or amendment' in the last mentioned subsection, refer to structural alteration." It should, however, be observed that the dictum of KENNEDY, J., is clearly due to a context in the London Act dealing specifically with structural matters as alternative to questions of condition. Moreover, as was pointed out in the Southwold Case, supra, he was not dealing with a case where the bad order and condition were alleged to make a thing (in that case, a water-closet) of itself a nuisance. The water-closet was constructed before the authority had passed byelaws relating to the construction of water-closets, and was not constructed in the manner which the byelaws subsequently passed required. It was held that the byelaws had no application, and that, even supposing they applied, the proceedings were not proper to enforce them.

Note to Section 41.

Owner or
occupier.

(l) See s. 306, post, p. 637, under which the owner may be empowered to enter to do these works if the occupier prevents him. It will be observed that the notice may be given to either the occupier or the owner, although by a subsequent clause the expenses incurred by the authority in doing the works are to be recovered from the owner only. In an action for a nuisance arising out of defective drains, the occupier and not the owner is prima facie liable (Russell v. Shenton (1842), 3 Q. B. 449), but the owner may be liable on indictment if it appears that he erected the building, etc. so as to create the nuisance, or so that it was likely to produce a nuisance after it had been let to a tenant (R. v. Pedly (1834), 1 A. & E. 822). And see notes to s. 94, post, p. 173.

Where several houses belonging to different owners are drained by a single private drain, which becomes a nuisance and injurious to health, and the authority, acting under this section, and s. 19 of the Act of 1890, serve upon each of the owners a notice addressed to them jointly to do the necessary works for the abatement of the nuisance, the fact that any one of such owners would be compelled to go upon the premises of the others in order to execute the necessary works, is no bar to the validity of the notice. Therefore, the authority, upon non-compliance with the notice, are entitled to execute the works themselves, and recover the expenses from the owners in the manner provided by s. 19 (Lancaster v. Barnes U. D. C., [1898] 1 Q. B. 855; 62 J. P. 405; but cf. Haedicke v. Friern Barnet U. D. C., cited in the notes under s. 19 of the P. H. A., 1890).

(m) In Hornsey Corporation v. Kershaw (1909), 73 J. P. 335, Middlesex Quarter Sessions held a notice to do work within seven days to be an unreasonable and therefore invalid one.

(n) See s. 251, post, p. 550, as to the recovery of this penalty.

Recovery of
expenses.

(o) As to the recovery of these expenses, see note (e) to s. 21, ante, p. 80. The order of the authority is conclusive and cannot be controlled or altered by the justices in proceedings to enforce payment, though an appeal will lie to the L. G. B. under s. 268, post, p. 592. See the notes to s. 36, ante, p. 95.

In Hornsey Corporation v. Kershaw (1909), 73 J. P. 335, Middlesex Quarter Sessions held that in a case under s. 41 and s. 19 of the Act of 1890, an appeal lay to sessions against a decision of justices who had refused to order an owner to pay his apportioned share of expenses, on the ground of the unreasonableness of the notice. The appeal failed.

In Walthamstow U. D. C. v. Henwood, [1897] 1 Ch. 41; 61 J. P. 23, the plaintiffs, who had given notice to an owner to do what was necessary to abate a nuisance under this section, and, on his default, had executed the works, obtained a declaration that they were entitled to a charge on the land and premises in respect of the sum apportioned together with interest and costs, the amount to be raised, if necessary, by sale in chambers.

SCAVENGING AND CLEANSING.

Regulations as to Streets and Houses.

Local authority to provide for cleansing of streets and removal of refuse.

42. Every local authority may, and when required by order of the Local Government Board shall (a), themselves undertake or contract for (b)—

The removal of house (bb) refuse from premises;

The cleansing of earth-closets privies (c) ashpits and cesspools (d); either for the whole or any part of their district: Moreover every urban authority and any rural authority, invested by the Local Government Board with the requisite powers (e) may, and when required by order of the said Board shall, themselves undertake or contract for (f) the proper cleansing of streets (g), and may also themselves undertake or contract for the proper watering (g) of streets for the whole or any part of their district (h). Section 42.

All matters collected by the local authority or contractor in pursuance of this section may be sold (i) or otherwise disposed of (ii) and any profits thus made by an urban authority shall be carried to the account of the fund or rate applicable by them for the general purposes of this Act; and any profits (k) thus made by a rural authority in respect of any contributory place shall be carried to the account of the fund or rate (l) out of which expenses incurred under this section by that authority in such contributory place are defrayed.

If any person removes or obstructs the local authority or contractor in removing any matters by this section authorised to be removed by the local authority, he shall for each offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds (m): Provided that the occupier of a house within the district shall not be liable to such penalty in respect of any such matters which are produced on his own premises and are intended to be removed for sale or for his own use, and are in the meantime kept so as not to be a nuisance (n).

(a) It is not clear that s. 299, post, p. 629, applies to a neglect of this duty; and it is understood that the L. G. B. consider that it does not. It may be (see R. v. Walker (1875), L. R. 10 Q. B. 355; 39 J. P. 438), that if such an order be disobeyed the authority may be indicted for a misdemeanor. It is not like an Order of the L. G. B. under the Poor Law Amendment Acts, which is enforceable by penalties under 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 99. Order of Local Government Board : how enforced.

The expenses incurred by an urban authority under this section in removing refuse, etc., are chargeable as part of their ordinary expenses under the Act (to the general district rate if one is levied). If the work is restricted to part of the district the urban council may avail themselves of s. 211 (4) of the Act. A rural council cannot restrict the incidence of expenses to a smaller area than the contributory place even with the assistance of the L. G. B. under s. 229. It is true that under s. 277 a "special drainage district" may be formed by resolution for the purpose of charging thereon exclusively the expenses of sewerage water supply or other works, but such districts become new rating areas for all the purposes of the Act (see s. 229), and the Board require very strong grounds to be shown before approving such a district—usually in connection with sewerage schemes involving considerable capital expenditure. Incidence of expenses.

The L. G. B. state that they are advised that a local authority have no statutory power to make and enforce a charge upon occupiers for removing house refuse or cleansing any of the receptacles mentioned in the section.

As to the removal of refuse from mews and other premises, see s. 50, post, p. 117.

In districts where the P. H. A., 1890, s. 26, is in force, if the authority themselves undertake or contract for the removal of house refuse they may make byelaws imposing on the occupier of any premises duties in connection with such removal so as to facilitate the work which the authority undertake or contract for. See the section and the notes thereto, post, p. 843. Byelaws to facilitate removal.

(bb) "House refuse" does not extend to dust and ashes, the exclusive produce of manufactories (Lyndon v. Standbridge (1857), 2 H. & N. 45. And see Law v. Dodd (1848), 1 Ex. 845). Ashes arising from coals burnt in the furnace of a steam-engine used for the purpose of sawing and lifting timber and other materials for carrying on the business of a pianoforte manufacturer, were held not to be house refuse in Gay v. Cadby (1877), 2 C. P. D. 391; 41 J. P. 503. Under the Metropolis Management Acts a local authority was held bound to remove refuse from a workhouse, although such workhouse was by a local Act rated at a less What is "house refuse" or "trade refuse."

amount than other property in the parish (Holborn Union (Guardians of) v. St. Leonard's (Vestry of), Shoreditch (1876), 2 Q. B. D. 145 ; 40 J. P. 740).

Under the Metropolis Management Acts it was held that a local authority were not bound to remove articles improperly placed in a dustbin, such as "broken glass, shoes, and other things which it might not be convenient otherwise to get rid of." Where such articles were removed, and were afterwards appropriated by servants of the authority, it was held that the contractor who had purchased and undertaken to dispose of the house refuse was not entitled to compensation in respect of them, on the ground that his contract only included such refuse as the authority were bound to remove (Collins v. Paddington (Vestry of) (1879), 48 L. J. Q. B. 345 ; 43 J. P. 367).

A magistrate decided that ashes from the furnaces of an hotel were not "refuse of trade" within the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, s. 129, and declined to state a case on the ground that his decision was by the section final and conclusive and that no point of law arose. It was held that there was a point of law involved, and he was required to state a case (R. v. Bridge (1890), 24 Q. B. D. 609 ; 54 J. P. 629). On a case being stated, it appeared that the appellants had refused to remove from the respondent's hotel, unless paid a reasonable sum for so doing, the ashes and clinkers produced in the furnaces of boilers used to generate steam for supplying power for the electric lighting of the hotel, for heating the public rooms and passages, for cooking, and for working the lift and pumping water. It was held that the ashes and clinkers were domestic refuse, and not the refuse of a trade manufacture or business (St. Martin's Vestry v. Gordon (1890), 59 L. J. M. C. 131 ; 54 J. P. 791 ; affirmed, [1891] 1 Q. B. 61 ; 55 J. P. 437). On the other hand, under the present section (s. 42), clinkers from the boilers of a steam laundry were held not to be "house refuse" in London and Provincial Laundry Co. v. Willesden L. B., [1892] 2 Q. B. 271 ; 56 J. P. 696.

The Public Health (London) Act, 1891, s. 141, defines "house refuse" as meaning ashes, cinders, breeze, rubbish, night soil, and filth, but not including trade refuse ; and "trade refuse" as meaning the refuse of any trade, manufacture or business, or of any building materials.

A sanitary authority in the metropolis refused to remove from a large hotel the refuse, consisting of ashes from the grates, sawdust strewn on the kitchen floors for the sake of cleanliness, empty bottles and tins of the sauces and various comestibles used in the kitchen, straw-packing cases for bottles, tea leaves, waste paper, egg shells, lemon peel, the general dust from the rooms and staircases, and from time to time small quantities of broken crockery-ware and glass, on the ground that it was "trade refuse." Upon a question raised under s. 33 (2) of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, a Divisional Court held (affirming the magistrate's decision) that the refuse was "house refuse" within s. 30 of that Act, and that the authority were bound to remove the same without payment (Westminster Corporation v. Gordon Hotels Co., [1906] 2 K. B. 39 ; 70 J. P. 258). The Court of Appeal and House of Lords held that the decision of a magistrate under s. 33 (2) upon the question whether particular refuse is or is not trade refuse is final. See [1908] A. C. 142 ; 72 J. P. 201 ; cf. Wills v. McSherry (No. 2), [1914] 1 K. B. 616 ; 78 J. P. 120, and Kydd v. Liverpool Watch Committee, [1908] A. C. 327 ; 72 J. P. 395. In a later case the appellants were the occupiers of premises which they used as a tea-shop, providing customers with refreshments and food for consumption on the premises, some of the food being cooked or prepared on the premises. No one slept on the premises at night. The refuse from the premises consisted of ashes and clinkers, coffee grounds, newspaper, cabbage leaves, egg-shells, dust, and general dirt, broken crockery, tea leaves, potato parings, scrapings from the sink, and sweepings from rooms. It did not include scraps left by customers, which were given away in charity. Upon a question raised under s. 30 (2), it was held that the refuse was "house refuse," and not "trade refuse," and that therefore the authority were bound to secure its due removal (Lyons & Co., Ltd. v. London Corporation, [1909] 2 K. B. 588 ; 73 J. P. 372).

Where s. 48 of the P. H. A., 1907, is in force in any district in pursuance of an order of the L. G. B., the local authority may be required to remove trade refuse in consideration of the payment of a reasonable charge. See post, p. 1125.

The Home Secretary, acting under the Explosives Act, 1875, ss. 37, 39, has made an Order, dated October 28th, 1904, in the following terms: "(1) Explosive shall not be deposited in any receptacle or place appropriated for refuse, and shall not be handed or forwarded to any dustman or other person employed in the removal of refuse, unless due notice has been given to such dustman or person, or to the dustman or person whose duty it is to remove refuse from such receptacle or place. (2) Explosive shall not be conveyed in any carriage or boat appropriated for the removal of refuse. In the event of any breach (by any act or default) of the foregoing byelaws, or an attempt to commit such breach: The person committing the offence shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding, in the case of the first offence, £10, and in the case of the second offence or any subsequent offence, £20, and also the following persons, viz., the owner of the carriage or boat in respect of which, or containing the explosive in respect of which, the offence is committed, the person in charge of such carriage, and the person owning such explosive, shall each be liable to a similar penalty, unless he proves that he had supplied proper means and issued proper orders for the observance, and used due diligence to enforce the observance, of these byelaws."

Note to
Section 42.

(c) An authority cannot undertake the cleansing of such privies only as meet their approval. See Pegg and Jones, Ltd. v. Derby Corporation, on p. 111, post. Cleansing of privies and cesspools.

Where a local authority has taken upon itself, under this section, the cleansing of privies belonging to cottage property, but has, after notification of an outbreak of typhoid fever, failed to eradicate fever germs, which have penetrated crevices in the brickwork, and cause a nuisance, such authority cannot, under s. 94, call upon an owner of the property to abate the nuisance by abolishing privies and substituting water-closets (Barnett v. Laskey (1899), 68 L. J. Q. B. 55; 63 J. P. 5).

(d) The defendants undertook under this section the duty of cleansing the cesspools of their district. For this purpose they contracted for the removal of the sewage from the cesspools, the contractor using the defendants' sewage cart and depositing the filth upon the lands of neighbouring farmers by arrangement which he made with them. The defendants did not instruct him where to deposit the sewage. The contractor, without the permission of the plaintiffs, deposited sewage removed from the cesspools upon the plaintiffs' land, causing a nuisance to them and their tenants. In an action for an injunction and damages, it was held that the defendants were liable (Robinson v. Beaconsfield R. D. C., [1911] 2 Ch. 188; 75 J. P. 353).

An authority made a byelaw that every occupier of premises should once at least in every three months cleanse every cesspool belonging to such premises. Subsequently the authority passed a resolution that "the scavenging of privies, closets and ashpits be undertaken by the board at once." Tenders were obtained and the work carried out under contracts. Certain owners and occupiers of premises on which there was a cesspool used to empty and cleanse the cesspool, but afterwards ceased to do so and contended that the obligation was on the authority. It was held that the words of s. 42 must be read distributively, and that an authority may undertake or contract for the cleansing of earth-closets, privies, ashpits and cesspools, or such of them as they may by resolution decide to deal with, and that, therefore, there was no obligation on the authority to empty and cleanse the cesspool (Stainland and Holywell Green Industrial Corn and Provision Society v. Stainland with Old Lindley U. D. C., [1906] 1 K. B. 233; 70 J. P. 150).

Under s. 46 of the P. H. A., 1907 (if it be applied in the district of any local authority) a cesspool which is prejudicial to health or otherwise objectionable for sanitary reasons, may be required to be filled up, removed or altered.

(e) See s. 276, post, p. 609. Orders conferring these powers on rural authorities usually declare the expenses to be special. Rural authorities.

Without, however, being invested with urban powers it would seem that a rural authority, now that they are the highway authority of their district (see s. 25 of the L. G. A., 1894), may water streets to the extent required for purposes of Note to Section 42. proper maintenance; and charge the expenses as general under s. 29 of the L. G. A., 1894.

Terms of contract.

(f) See form of agreement as to supply of horses, etc. for this purpose in Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 593. In Moon v. Camberwell Borough Council (1903), 68 J. P. 57; 89 L. T. 595, the plaintiff entered into a contract with the defendants whereby he agreed to supply horses, harness, etc. for scavenging work during the period of one year "whenever thereto required" by the defendants' engineer. The conditions annexed to the contract provided that the defendants might, if they thought proper, without in any way vitiating the contract, execute on their own account, or employ other contractors to execute, any works ordered by them. Some time before the expiration of the period covered by the contract the defendants ceased to employ the plaintiff, and gave the work to another contractor. In an action to recover damages for breach of contract, it was held that there was no obligation, either express or implied, on the part of the defendants to employ the plaintiff.

(g) It will be observed that the authority's operations need not be confined to streets repairable by the inhabitants at large. But see s. 148.

Cleansing and watering streets.

(h) Note the distinction. The authority may be compelled to cleanse the streets, but may water the streets at their discretion. See also notes to s. 43, post, p. 111.

The powers of s. 42 (as to street watering) do not enable district councils to undertake the tarring of roads for dust prevention. Such work must be done in pursuance of the council's ordinary highway powers. As regards main roads maintained by the county council, a district council are empowered to contribute to the expense under s. 3 of the Highways and Bridges Act, 1891, the operation being regarded as an improvement of the roads. As to main roads maintained by a district council under s. 11 of the L. G. A., 1888, it is possible that the arrangement with the county council provides for the matter. A rural district council who succeeded a highway board may restrict the incidence of expense to parishes specially benefited under the proviso to s. 3 of the Act of 1891; but under all other circumstances there is a difficulty in doing so, the L. G. B. being indisposed to declare (under s. 49 of the P. H. A., 1890) any expenses special which are distinctly highway expenses, in view of s. 29 (a) of the L. G. A., 1894.

(i) See Collins v. Paddington (Vestry of), cited on p. 108, ante.

Disposal of refuse.

(ii) See s. 45, post, p. 113, as to providing place of deposit. Matters collected must not be disposed of so as to cause injury to other persons. In Atkinson v. Corporation of Huddersfield (Times, April 20th, 1893), CHITTY, J., granted an injunction against the defendant corporation from discharging snow, street sweepings, and other refuse into a river at a point above the mills of the plaintiffs so as to cause injury to the plaintiffs by the pollution of the river. In Jones v. Welshpool Corporation, Times, Nov. 18th, 1904, a nuisance arising from a field on which refuse was tipped was restrained by the granting of a perpetual injunction restraining further tipping so as to cause or occasion any nuisance to the plaintiff, the defendants undertaking within fourteen days to cover with road sweepings or earth such portions of this heap of refuse as had not already been so covered. See also Robinson v. Beaconsfield R. D. C., in note (d), supra; Att.-Gen. v. S. E. & C. Rail. Co.'s Managing Committee, cited in note (g) under s. 91, post, p. 167, and cases in notes to ss. 44, 45, pp. 112, 113.

Profits.

(k) It is presumed that the contractor may contract to receive these matters for his own profit, and thereby reduce the amount otherwise payable to him.

(l) I.e., to the credit of the common fund of the rural district or of the separate rate for special expenses, as the case may be. See note (e).

(m) As to the recovery of this penalty, see s. 251, post, p. 550; and see Borrow v. Howland (1896), 60 J. P. 391; 74 L. T. 787.

Retention of valuable refuse.

(n) It is not enough that the matters are produced upon the premises; they must be intended to be removed for sale or for use, e.g., for manure, and until removed they must be kept so as not to create a nuisance; so that if the matters create a nuisance, which word must here, it is presumed, signify a public nuisance, the authority or the contractor may remove them and must not be obstructed.

Under 57 Geo. 3, c. 29, ss. 59, 60, the scavenger of a metropolitan district was entitled to take away from houses and premises "their soil, ashes, cinders, rubbish, dust, dirt and filth." It was held that these words included only such dust, etc. as were, in the contemplation of the owners, rubbish or refuse, and which they desired to dispose of in that character. Therefore, where brewers burnt coals in the process of brewing, which coals were only partially consumed by having once passed through the fires, and removed them mixed with the dust and ashes arising from the same fires to other premises, where they used them for heating water to cleanse their casks, it was held that the scavenger was not entitled to claim any of the articles so removed (Filbey v. Combe (1837), 2 M. & W. 677). See also Law v. Dodd (1848), 1 Ex. 845.

Note to
Section 42.

43. If a local authority who have themselves undertaken or contracted for the removal of house refuse from premises, or the cleansing of earth-closets privies ashpits and cesspools fail, without reasonable excuse (a), after notice in writing (b) from the occupier of any house within their district (c) requiring them to remove any house refuse or to cleanse any earth-closet privy ashpit or cesspool belonging to such house or used by the occupiers thereof, to cause the same to be removed or cleansed, as the case may be, within seven days, the local authority shall be liable to pay to the occupier of such house a penalty not exceeding five shillings for every day during which such default continues after the expiration of the said period (d).

local authority to remove refuse, etc.

(a) An authority were summoned under this section for failing without reasonable excuse to cleanse the privies in a factory after having undertaken the cleansing of privies in their district. A local Act provided that all privies should be subject to the approval of the authority, but the privies in question had not been approved by them as they did not satisfy their requirements. The authority had themselves undertaken the cleansing of all privies which had received their approval. It was held, that although s. 42 authorised an authority to undertake the cleansing of privies "either for the whole or any part of their district," this did not empower them to undertake the cleansing merely of such privies as had received their approval; that the authority must be treated as having undertaken the cleansing of all privies in their district, and that the non-approval of the privies in question was not a reasonable excuse for failure to cleanse them (Pegg and Jones, Ltd. v. Derby Corporation, [1909] 2 K. B. 511; 73 J. P. 413).

excuse.

(b) It is not clear how this notice is to reach an authority, who meet only at intervals. The suggestion which occurs, is that it should be served upon their clerk at their offices. For a form of notice, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 589.

(c) It is presumed that the word "district" must be read as "part of district" "District." when the authority have availed themselves of their powers under the preceding section to limit their operations to a defined portion of their district. It is understood that this view has been taken by the L. G. B.

(d) See as to the recovery of this penalty, s. 251, post, p. 550. It is presumed that the justices can settle the amount of the penalty to be paid by the authority. The corporate property of the authority, whether urban or rural, would be liable to a distress for the payment of this penalty. Having regard to the penalty imposed by this section, it may be doubted whether an occupier could maintain an action for damages through the failure to remove refuse, etc. See Ellis v. Strand District Board of Works (1892), 67 L. T. 307; 8 T. L. R. 739, and Saunders v. Holborn District Board of Works, [1895] 1 Q. B. 64.

local authority to make byelaws

44. Where the local authority do not themselves undertake or contract for—

The cleansing of footways and pavements (a) adjoining any premises,

Section 44.

The removal of house refuse (b) from any premises, imposing duty of cleansing,

etc. on occupier.

The cleansing of earth-closets privies ashpits and cesspools belonging to any premises (c), they may make byelaws (d) imposing the duty of such cleansing or removal, at such intervals as they think fit, on the occupier of any such premises.

An urban authority may also make byelaws (d) for the prevention of nuisances (e) arising from snow filth dust ashes and rubbish (f), and for the prevention of the keeping of animals (g) on any premises so as to be injurious to health.

(a) These are included under the term “streets” in s. 42. The authority may contract for the cleansing of the road, and make byelaws for the cleansing of footways and pavements, but cannot make byelaws for the cleansing of the roads.

refuse.”

(b) As to what is “house refuse,” see s. 42, note (bb), ante, p. 107. See Borrow v. Howland (1896), 60 J. P. 391; 74 L. T. 787, as to the liability of an occupier under s. 16 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, to a penalty for refusing to allow scavengers to enter his premises for the removal of refuse.

“Earth-closets, etc.”

(c) For the purpose of the exercise of this power to make byelaws the words of the section must be read distributively. See Stainland, etc. Society v. Stainland with Old Lindley U. D. C., cited in the notes to s. 42.

Byelaws
generally.

(d) Byelaws under s. 44 may be made for part of the district, while the authority themselves do the work (under s. 42) in the remainder of the district. A difficulty occurs, however, as regards the expenses of the authority in such a case, particularly in the case of a rural authority, who have not the same powers as an urban authority under s. 211 of dividing their district for rating purposes.

Byelaws
under other
statutes.

As to the making, confirmation and enforcement of byelaws, see ss. 182—184, and s. 251. Byelaws under this section are unnecessary if, by the operation of any local Act, ss. 87—98 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, are in force within the district. Byelaws under this section are confined to the imposing of the duty. It does not authorise any direction as to the manner of cleansing, except as regards prescribing the intervals.

Where the P. H. A., 1890, s. 26, is in force, the authority may make byelaws :

“(a) For prescribing the times for the removal or carriage through the streets of any foecal or offensive or noxious matter or liquid, whether such matter or liquid shall be in course of removal or carriage from within or without or through their district : (b) For providing that the vessel, receptacle, cart, or carriage used therefor shall be properly constructed and covered so as to prevent the escape of any such matter or liquid : (c) For compelling the cleansing of any place whereon such matter or liquid shall have been dropped or spilt in such removal or carriage.” See the section and the notes thereto, post, p. 843.

(e) See further, the provisions of s. 91, as to nuisances arising out of some of these matters.

Byelaws as to filth nuisances and keeping

(f) Sweeping mud into a sewer was held to be an offence against 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, s. 205, which forbids the sweeping into any sewer of any “soil, rubbish, or filth, or any other thing” (Metropolitan Board of Works v. Eaton (1884), 48 J. P. 611; 50 L. T. 634).

A railway company received in their goods yard a truck of manure, which had been carried by them in the ordinary course of their business. It arrived on Sunday, and notice was at once given to the consignee, who proceeded to remove it on Monday; on being emptied it gave forth a very offensive smell. The company were convicted under the following byelaw : “No person shall deposit, throw or allow to run, lodge, or accumulate upon the surface of any street, square, court, highway, or place, or on any waste or unoccupied ground, or on any uncovered drain, ditch, watercourse, sink, pond, or other collection of water, or expose or cause to be exposed in any other manner whatever within the district, any animal or vegetable matter, fish, offal, ordure, blood, bones, manure, shells, broken glass, china, or earthenware, dust, ashes, house refuse, waste, or runnings from any manufactory, or other offensive or noxious matter whatever" :—Held, that the conviction was wrong (L. B. & S. C. Rail. Co. v. Haywards Heath U. D. C. (1899), 80 L. T. 266). Note to Section 44.

(g) In Everett v. Grapes (1861), 25 J. P. 644; 3 L. T. 669, it was held, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 90, that a byelaw aimed against keeping pigs in a borough generally, instead of keeping them so as not to be a nuisance, was bad. But in Wanstead L. B. v. Wooster (1873), 37 J. P. 403; 38 J. P. 21, a byelaw against keeping pigs within one hundred feet of a dwelling-house was held to be valid on the ground that in a town the doing so was likely to be a nuisance that it might be prohibited altogether. It was also decided that the byelaw might require the removal of filth, etc. without any previous requisition by the authority. But the principle of this decision was held to apply only to urban and not to rural districts. Therefore, where a rural authority having urban powers under this section made a byelaw prohibiting the keeping of swine within fifty feet of any dwelling-house within the district, it was held that the byelaw was unreasonable and bad (Heap v. Burnley Union (1884), 12 Q. B. D. 617; 48 J. P. 359). COLERIDGE, L.C.J., said that it was impossible to attempt to lay down what under all circumstances would be a reasonable byelaw; but it seemed to him unreasonable to say, that in country districts nobody should keep a pig within fifty feet of his dwelling-house. The corresponding section of the Public Health (Ireland) Act, 1878, s. 54, enables urban authorities to make byelaws for "the regulation of the keeping of animals on any premises, or for the prevention of such keeping, so as to be injurious to health." A byelaw under this section that: "No swine shall be kept in any yard within a distance of twenty-one feet from a dwelling-house or public building or any building in which any persons may be or may be intended to be employed in any manufacture, trade, or business without the special permission of the sanitary authority," was held valid (Lutton v. Doherty (1885), 16 L. R. Ir. 493).

It is not necessary in order to procure a conviction under such a byelaw that a nuisance has been caused by the breach of it (Tong Street L. B. v. Seed (1874), 39 J. P. 278). A byelaw made by an urban authority imposed a penalty for keeping swine within fifty yards of a dwelling-house. The defendant, in the course of his business, on receiving orders for pigs, used to bring them into the urban district within fifty yards of a dwelling-house in the morning and keep them there till the evening, when they were sent off by railway or otherwise. The pigs were not fed on the premises nor allowed to remain there at night. It was held that there was, nevertheless, a "keeping" of the swine within fifty yards of the dwelling-house, contrary to the byelaw (Steers v. Manton (1893), 57 J. P. 584). See further, as to keeping pigs, s. 47 (1), post, p. 114.

45. Any urban authority may, if they see fit, provide in proper Power to and convenient situations receptacles for the temporary deposit and provide collection of dust ashes and rubbish; they may also provide fit buildings receptacles and places for the deposit of any matters collected by them in pursuance of this part of this Act. for deposit of rubbish.

It is from this section that an urban authority derive their power to provide a refuse destructor. Upon receiving an application from a rural authority for sanction to a loan for the provision of a destructor, the L. G. B. stated that the authority must first be invested with the powers of the section, and that if it was desired to treat the expenses as special expenses an order must be obtained under s. 229. The same view is taken with regard to the provision of refuse tips by rural authorities.

It will be observed that the section only authorises the provision of permanent buildings and places of deposit when the refuse is collected by the authority themselves; this restriction, however, is not contained in s. 39. The point is sometimes of importance to rural authorities who require urban powers under s. 276 for the provision of certain conveniences of the kind mentioned in s. 45, and do not themselves propose to collect refuse.

Note to
Section 45.

As to the acquisition of land for the purposes of this section, see s. 175, post, p. 410; and as to the expense, see s. 207, post, p. 468.

Where the P. H. A., 1890, s. 20, is in force, the authority may make regulations and byelaws for sanitary conveniences provided by them.

As to an authority's liability to a person upon whose land, or in whose stream, their servants or contractors deposit refuse collected by them, see Robinson v. Beaconsfield R. D. C., on p. 110, ante, and cases in note (ii), on p. 110, ante. As to damages for trespass by tipping rubbish, see Whitwham v. Westminster Brymbo Coal and Coke Co., [1896] 2 Ch. 538. Using land as a rubbish shoot may amount to waste in a lessee (West Ham Central Charity Board v. East London Waterworks Co., [1900] 1 Ch. 624).

Houses to be
certificate of officer of health or of two medical practitioners.

46. Where, on the certificate of the medical officer of health or of any two medical practitioners (a), it appears to any local authority that any house or part thereof is in such a filthy or unwholesome condition that the health of any person is affected or endangered thereby, or that the whitewashing cleansing or purifying of any house or part thereof would tend to prevent or check infectious disease, the local authority shall give notice in writing (b) to the owner or occupier (c) of such house or part thereof to whitewash cleanse or purify the same, as the case may require.

If the person to whom notice is so given fails to comply therewith within the time therein specified, he shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding ten shillings for every day during which he continues to make default; and the local authority may, if they think fit, cause such house or part thereof to be whitewashed cleansed or purified, and may recover in a summary manner the expenses (d) incurred by them in so doing from the person in default (e).

(a) They must be persons registered under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90, and 49 & 50 Vict. c. 48. Certificates signed by unregistered persons are invalid. See 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90, s. 37, and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 7. A form of certificate will be found in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 596.

(b) See as to this notice, ss. 266, 267, post, p. 590. See form of notice in Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 596. The authority may select either the owner (defined in s. 4, ante, p. 8) or the occupier.

(c) See s. 306, post, p. 637, under which the owner may be empowered to enter to do these works when the occupier prevents him.

(d) See as to the recovery of the penalty and expenses, s. 251, post, p. 550. And see note (e) to s. 21, ante, p. 80.

(e) Further provisions are contained in the sections relating to nuisances, ss. 91—97, post. See also the provisions of the Factory Acts, 1901 and 1907. These Acts, which relate to factories, bakehouses and laundries, are set out in App. I., post. See also the provisions of the Infectious Disease (Prevention) Act, 1890, s. 5, post, p. 808, and the Housing of the Working Classes Acts, 1890, 1903 and 1909, post. The latter Acts deal with houses in a condition dangerous to health, so as to be unfit for human habitation.

respect of certain nuisances on premises.

47. Any person who in any urban district—

- (1) Keeps any swine or pigstye in any dwelling-house, or so as to be a nuisance to any person (a); or
- (2) Suffers any waste or stagnant water to remain in any cellar or place within any dwelling-house for twenty-four hours after written notice (b) to him from the urban authority to remove the same; or shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings, and to a further penalty not exceeding five shillings for every day during which the offence is continued (c), and the urban authority shall (d) abate or cause to be abated every such nuisance, and may recover in a summary manner (e) the expenses incurred by them in so doing from the occupier (f) of the premises on which the nuisance exists.

(3) Allows the contents of any water-closet privy or cesspool to overflow or soak therefrom, Section 47.

(a) Keeping swine in a city is a nuisance at common law (R. v. Wigg (1705), Salk. 460). The sub-section is expressed very generally, and seems to give a public remedy for a private grievance. A byelaw under s. 44, ante, p. 111, may regulate the erection of pigstyes so far as injury to health is concerned; but if a nuisance be caused, compliance with the byelaw will not protect the offender from the consequences of this section. See as to swine in the metropolis, 54 & 55 Vict. c. 76, s. 17; Chelsea (Vestry of) v. King (1864), 34 L. J. M. C. 9; 29 J. P. 39.

The sub-section applies not merely to the keeping of swine in improper places, but to keeping in an improper manner (Digby v. West Ham L. B. (1858), 22 J. P. 304). It is not necessary to prove that the keeping of the swine is injurious to health (Banbury Sanitary Authority v. Page (1881), 8 Q. B. D. 97; 46 J. P. 184). It is clear swine are not to be kept in a dwelling-house at all. As to what amounts to "keeping" swine, see Steers v. Manton, ante, p. 113.

(b) See as to this notice, which, as it seems, should be given by the clerk of the authority, ss. 266, 267. A form of notice will be found in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 597.

(c) See s. 251, as to the recovery of the penalty. It would seem that the continuance referred to, except under sub-s. (2), must be after the conviction, for there is no other date from which the time is to be calculated under sub-ss. (1) and (3).

(d) There is no provision in the Act, unless s. 299, post, p. 629, applies, for compelling performance of this duty.

(e) As to the recovery of these expenses, see note (e) to s. 21, ante, p. 80, and s. 251, post, p. 550.

(f) Note here that the recovery is to be from the occupier; no recourse is given against the owner. It will be seen that this section applies to such matters as would generally form nuisances to which ss. 91 et seq., post, pp. 162 et seq., would apply. Then recourse may be had against the owner as well as the occupier. The above section does not require proof of any injury to health. See Banbury Sanitary Authority v. Page, supra.

Offensive Ditches and Collections of Matter.

48. Where any watercourse or open ditch lying near to or forming the boundary between the district of any local authority and any adjoining district is foul and offensive, so as injuriously to affect the district of such local authority, any justice having jurisdiction in such adjoining district may, on the application of such local authority (a), summon the local authority of such adjoining district to appear before a court of summary jurisdiction (b) to show cause why an order should not be made by such court for cleansing such watercourse or open ditch, and for executing such permanent or other structural works as may appear to such court to be necessary; and such court, after hearing the parties, or ex parte in case of the default of any of them to appear, may make such order (c) with reference to the execution of the works, and the persons by whom the same shall be executed, and by whom and in what

Provision for obtaining order for cleansing offensive ditches lying near to or forming the boundaries of districts.

Section 48. proportions the costs of such works shall be paid, and also as to the amount thereof, and the time and mode of payment, as to such court may seem reasonable.

(a) It is presumed that this application must be made by an officer of the local authority, who will be directed to make such application by their order, which should be entered on the minutes. It cannot be necessary that the application should be under seal. As to the appearance of the authority summoned, see s. 259, post, p. 577.

(b) See the definition, ante, p. 36.

(c) This order will justify the entry on any lands when the entry may be necessary for the execution of the order. As to compensation, see s. 308, post, p. 638. As to the time allowed for appealing from the order, see R. v. Barnett R. S. A. (1876), 1 Q. B. D. 558; 41 J. P. 6; and s. 31 of the S. J. A., 1879, set out in the notes under s. 269, post, p. 595. The W. rural sanitary authority summoned the N. rural sanitary authority under this section, for not cleansing a ditch situated on the boundary of, but in, the N. district. The justices made an order on the W. authority to cleanse the ditch, the nuisance being caused by sewage from their district. The W. authority contended that they could not comply with the order without committing a trespass, but it was held that such a defence could not be set up under the section, and that the order was right (Woburn Sanitary Authority v. Newport Pagnell Sanitary Authority (1887), 51 J. P. 694).

filth upon certificate of inspector of

49. Where in any urban district (a) it appears to the inspector of nuisances that any accumulation of manure dung soil or filth or other offensive or noxious matter ought to be removed, he shall give notice to the person to whom the same belongs, or to the occupier of the premises whereon it exists, to remove the same (b); and if such notice is not complied with within twenty-four hours from the service thereof, the manure dung soil or filth or matter referred to shall be vested in and be sold or disposed of by the urban authority (c), and the proceeds thereof shall be applied in payment of the expenses incurred by them in the execution of this section; and the surplus (if any) shall be paid on demand to the owner of the matter removed.

The expenses of removal by the urban authority of any such accumulation, if and so far as they are not covered by the sale thereof, may be recovered by the urban authority in a summary manner (d) from the person to whom the accumulation belongs, or from the occupier of the premises, or (where there is no occupier) from the owner (e).

(a) It will be observed that this section, which places great power in the hands of the inspector of nuisances, applies only to urban districts. It is not the practice of the L. G. B. to put this provision in force in rural districts, unless the circumstances are shown to be very exceptional. The Board's view is that rural councils can deal with nuisances arising from accumulations of offensive or noxious matters under the nuisance clauses of the Act (ss. 91 et seq.); they may also make and enforce byelaws as to nuisances under s. 44, and may themselves undertake the collection of house refuse and the cleansing of receptacles under s. 42. The Board also consider s. 50 unsuitable to rural districts.

(b) For a form of notice, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 598. A company, in whom a harbour was vested, were held bound, under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, s. 12, to remove sea-weed, which, by the action of the sea, was drifted into the harbour, and being left there became a nuisance (Margate Pier and Harbour Proprietors v. Margate Town Council (1869), 33 J. P. 437; 20 L. T. 564). An accumulation of stable dung, which may be dealt with under this section, may also be within the provisions of ss. 91—94, post, pp. 162—173 (Smith v. Waghorn (1863), 27 J. P. 744).

(c) No express power is given to the officer to enter and remove the offensive matter ; but it is implied, otherwise there would be no expenses in the execution of the section. A similar clause existed in 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, s. 59, and in 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, s. 18 ; but the latter Act took effect after an order of justices for the abatement of a nuisance. The present Act adopts the provisions in the latter Act for the disposal of the surplus, and not that of the earlier Act, so that the owner may sometimes be benefited by the action of the authority. As to the sale of the matters, see s. 101, post, p. 184. It must be noticed that a sale is not absolutely required, but that the matter may be otherwise disposed of, perhaps by deposit on land of the local authority, on payment of the value minus the cost of removal.

Note to
Section 49.

It is the duty at common law of the owner of vacant land to prevent his land from being a public nuisance, although such a nuisance may be caused by the acts of other persons ; and the Attorney-General, on behalf of the public, is entitled to an injunction to prevent such owner from committing a breach of that duty. The fact that a sanitary authority under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, have power, or a duty, to themselves abate a nuisance, or to take proceedings to procure its abatement, does not, having regard to ss. 13 and 138 of that Act, prevent them from obtaining, in an action brought by them as relators with the Attorney-General, an injunction to prevent the continuance of the nuisance (Att.-Gen. v. Tod-Heatley, [1897] 1 Ch. 560).

(d) See, as to the recovery of these expenses, note (e) to s. 21, ante, p. 80, and s. 251, post, p. 550.

(e) See the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 8.

50. Notice may be given by any urban authority (a) (by public announcement (b) in the district or otherwise) for the periodical removal of manure or other refuse matter from mews stables or other premises ; and where any such notice has been given any person to whom the manure or other refuse matter belongs who fails so to remove the same, or permits a further accumulation, and does not continue such periodical removal at such intervals as the urban authority direct, shall be liable without further notice to a penalty not exceeding twenty shillings (c) for each day during which such manure or other refuse matter is permitted to accumulate.

(a) See note (a) to preceding section.

(b) This word was used in 29 & 30 Vict. c. 90, s. 53, from which this clause is taken. It has no definite meaning. An advertisement in the district, and printed placards affixed to the walls of mews, stables, or other places, seem to satisfy the term. Compare s. 36 (2) of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891. For a form of notice, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 599.

(c) As to the recovery of this penalty, see s. 251, post, p. 550. The accumulation referred to must be after the notice.

WATER SUPPLY.

Powers of Local Authority in relation to Supply of Water.

51. Any urban authority may (a) provide their district (aa) or any part thereof, and any rural authority may (a) provide their district (aa) or any contributory place therein, or any part of any such contributory place, with a supply of water proper and sufficient for public and private purposes (b), and for those purposes or any of them, may—

(1) Construct and maintain waterworks (c), dig wells, and do any other necessary acts ; and

powers for supplying district with water.

Section 51.

- (2) Take on lease or hire any waterworks (c), and (with the sanction of the Local Government Board) purchase any waterworks (c), or any water or right to take or convey water, either within or without their district (d), and any rights powers and privileges of any water company (e); and
- (3) Contract (f) with any person for a supply of water.

Duty of local authority.

(a) These words are in themselves permissive and enabling, but if an authority do not avail themselves of this power where a public water supply is required, and they can procure it, they will be in default, and proceedings may be taken under s. 299, post, p. 629. A rural authority cannot, at the expense of the rates, promote a private Bill to attain that end (Cleverton v. St. German's R. S. A. (1886), 56 L. J. Q. B. 83; 3 T. L. R. 43). They might probably promote a Bill, if they can find persons to provide the money (Att.-Gen. v. West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board (1905), 69 J. P. 177; 3 L. G. R. 764); and such Bill might contain a clause providing (in the event of it becoming an Act) for payment of all the expenses out of the rates (cf. Uttoxeter Act, 1892). As to the powers of a parish council in relation to water supply, see the L. G. A., 1894, s. 8 (1) (e), (i), (k); but s. 8 (3) specially provides that nothing in that section shall derogate from any obligation of a district council with respect to the supply of water or the execution of sanitary works.

The Public Health (Water) Act, 1878 (set out at length, post, p. 700), provides by s. 3 that it shall be the duty of every rural authority to see that every occupied dwelling-house within their district has, within a reasonable distance, an available supply of water sufficient for the consumption and use for domestic purposes of the inmates of the house. It may, therefore, be the duty of a rural authority to provide a water supply. The same section provides that nothing in that Act is to be deemed to relieve the authority of their duty to provide a water supply under this Act. Section 11 of the Act of 1878 provides that the L. G. B. may, if they think fit, by order invest any urban authority with all or any of the powers and duties which are by that Act given to a rural authority, and such investment may be made either unconditionally or subject to any conditions to be specified by the Board as to the time, portion of the district, or manner during at or in which the powers and duties are to be exercised.

(aa) Semble, an authority may carry out works for procuring a water supply in an adjoining district without obtaining any consent from the authority of such district. Cf. Withington L. B. v. Manchester Corporation, [1893] 2 Ch. 19; 57 J. P. 340.

“Limits of supply” in case of companies.

A company, authorised to supply water within a certain area, extended its main to the boundary of such area, and from thence continued it at a consumer's expense to a spot outside the area, where they erected a hydrant and meter from which pipes were laid to the consumer's house: it was held that the company were supplying water outside their area, and must be restrained (Att.-Gen. v. West Gloucestershire Water Co., [1909] 2 Ch. 338; 73 J. P. 453). See also Att.-Gen. v. Frimley, etc. Water Co., [1908] 1 Ch. 727; 72 J. P. 204; Marriott v. East Grinstead Gas and Water Co., [1909] 1 Ch. 70; 72 J. P. 509, and Att.-Gen. v. South Staffordshire Water Co. (1909), 25 T. L. R. 408, as to water companies exceeding their statutory powers by sinking wells on additional land acquired only for “ancillary” purposes.

Purposes of supply.

(b) 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, s. 75, limited the power to private purposes. This section extends it to public purposes also, but this general language must be qualified by the nature and extent of the district. See also West Surrey Water Co. v. Guardians of Chertsey Union, cited in the notes to s. 52, post, p. 124. As to the supply of water for trade purposes, see s. 65, post, p. 139.

Purchase of waterworks.

(c) See the definition of waterworks in s. 4, ante, p. 34. The sanction of the L. G. B. is introduced for the first time, and will operate to protect both the owners of water rights and the interests of the ratepayers. Section 63, post, p. 136, provides for leases and sales of waterworks to an authority.

Upon receiving an application for their sanction under the section (usually combined with a proposal to borrow money) the Board require the district council to furnish a copy of the resolution directing it, a copy of the resolution passed by the members of the water company under s. 63, and a copy of a provisional agreement for the purchase of the undertaking. Financial particulars of the district are also required as well as the following information with respect to the waterworks : (1) A full description, accompanied by a plan or plans of the works ; (2) particulars as to the nature, age and condition of each portion of the works ; (3) whether the water has to be raised by mechanical means or is supplied wholly by gravitation, and, if the former, the height to which it has to be raised and the nature and power of the pumping machinery ; (4) a description of the source or sources of water, including information as to the volume obtainable from it (or from each as the case may be) in the driest seasons ; and (5) the quality of the water as shown by analysis, or, if it is derived from more than one source, by a separate analysis of the water from each source. The Board require further to be informed of the nature of the water rights of the company ; the number of persons supplied with water ; and whether the company supply water beyond the district ; and to be furnished with a statement showing the annual income of the company and the annual working cost of the undertaking, including establishment charges and interest on capital. A local inquiry is usually directed.

Note to Section 51.

Practice as to loans.

By an agreement (sanctioned by statute) two water companies agreed that company A. should take over the works, provide for a mortgage debt, and pay interest on the shares of company B. The deed carrying out this transaction provided that if company A. (or their intended assignees, the corporation or local board), being desirous of becoming the absolute and unrestricted owners of the works of company B., subject only to the mortgage debt, should "on or before any December 25th, after having given to company B. six months' previous notice of their desire to avail themselves of the option thereby given, pay unto company B. £46,246, the amount of their share capital, the party so paying should become absolutely entitled to the works." In June, 1870, the corporation, who had acquired the interest of company A., gave notice to company B. of their intention to pay the £46,246, on December 25th following, but were unable, from want of funds, to carry out the purchase. In June, 1871, they again gave notice that they would pay the money on December 25th, 1871 :—Held, that the corporation by giving the first notice and failing to act upon it, had not lost the right given to them by the deed of purchasing after six months' notice on or before any December 25th (Ward v. Wolverhampton Waterworks Co. (1871), L. R. 13 Eq. 243.) A water board was constituted by special Act with the right of supplying water within the boundaries of two boroughs and certain outlying districts, provided that when so required by the sanitary authority of any such outlying district the board should sell to such sanitary authority the mains, pipes, and fittings belonging to the board within that district at a price to be fixed, in default of agreement, by an arbitrator, and that after such sale the board should cease to supply water within such district. In an arbitration under this proviso, between the board and an outlying district, it was held that in fixing the price the basis of calculation should be merely the value of the mains, pipes, and fittings regarded as plant in situ, capable of earning a profit, and that the arbitrator must not include in the price compensation to the board for the loss of the right to supply water in the outlying district after the sale (Stockton and Middlesbrough Water Board v. Kirkleatham L. B., [1893] A. C. 444 ; 57 J. P. 772). See observations on this case in London C. C. v. London Street Tramways Co., [1894] 2 Q. B. 189 ; affirmed sub nom. London Street Tramways Co. v. London C. C., [1894] A. C. 489 ; and see also for decisions as to "purchase clauses" in the case of gasworks, p. 367, post, Wolstanton United U. D. C. and Burslem Corporation, In re (1907), 72 J. P. 28 ; 6 L. G. R. 523 ; Hamilton Gas Co. v. Hamilton Corporation, [1910] A. C. 300 ; 74 J. P. 185 ; Perth Gas Co. v. Perth Corporation, [1911] A. C. 506 ; and in the case of tramways cases noted under the Tramways Act, 1870, s. 43, in App. I., p. 1523.

When a scheme of water supply proposed by a district council involves the sinking of a well to obtain the required supply, the L. G. B. require the council to proceed by steps, and are only willing at first to sanction a loan for the amount of new water-works.

Note to

necessary for the boring and preliminary expenses. This loan is usually repayable within five years, but the Board express willingness, in the event of a good supply of water being found, to sanction the reborrowing, for an extended period, of so much of the loan as is properly outstanding. Any provisional agreement entered into with the owner of the land should be so framed as to secure to the district council the possession of the land in the event of the boring proving satisfactory. In the case of all lands required for the scheme the freehold should be obtained, if possible; otherwise the period allowed for the repayment of the loan may be curtailed. Upon the completion of a borehole the Board require the yield of water to be ascertained by continuous pumping night and day without cessation for a period of at least fourteen days, and particulars of the results to be supplied to them in a particular form.

Where a rural district council determine to adopt plans for the water supply of a contributory place, they are required to give notice to the parish council before entering into a contract. See the L. G. A., 1894, s. 16 (3), post, p. 992.

The Limited Owners Reservoirs and Water Supply Further Facilities Act, 1877, in App. I., p. 1661, provides that the construction or erection of reservoirs or other works of a permanent character for the supply of water to any sanitary or other local authority or water company, shall be deemed to be an improvement of land within the meaning of 27 & 28 Vict. c. 114, s. 9, and shall be sanctioned by the commissioners if it can be shown to their satisfaction that such reservoirs or works will effect a permanent yearly increase in the value of settled lands, or will be permanently productive of a yearly revenue to the owner of such lands exceeding the yearly amount proposed to be charged thereon; and the construction of such works is to be deemed to include the purchase by the landowner of any water right or other easement which might otherwise interfere with or prevent the construction of the same or any such supply of water as aforesaid (s. 5). Any landowner charging or proposing to charge his estate with the cost of the construction of reservoirs or other works for the supply of water under the Act, may enter into any agreement for the supply of water to any sanitary or other local authority, for any term not exceeding the number of years during which the cost of the improvement or any part of it is made a charge upon the estate: Provided that every such agreement be approved of by the commissioners, and that no premium or benefit in the nature of a premium be reserved thereby by the landowner (s. 6). The commissioners referred to were the Inclosure Commissioners, afterwards the Land Commissioners under the Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 48, and now the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries under 52 & 53 Vict. c. 30, s. 2, and 3 Edw. 7, c. 31, s. 1. See also 60 & 61 Vict. c. 44, and 62 & 63 Vict. c. 46.

waterworks.

As to the rating of waterworks provided by a local authority, see R. v. West Middlesex Waterworks Co. (1859), 28 L. J. M. C. 135; 1 El. & El. 716; Chelsea Waterworks Co. v. Overseers of Putney (1860), 8 W. R. 607; Worcester Corporation v. Droitwich Assessment Committee (1876), 2 Ex. D. 49; 41 J. P. 355; Peterborough Corporation v. Stamford Union (1883), 31 W. R. 949; R. v. South Staffordshire Waterworks Board (1885), 16 Q. B. D. 359; 50 J. P. 20; Dewsbury and Heckmondwike Waterworks Board v. Penistone Union (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 384; R. v. Birstall L. B. (1885), 1 T. L. R. 541; Merthyr Tydfil L. B. v. Merthyr Tydfil Union, [1891] 1 Q. B. 186; 55 J. P. 294; Liverpool Corporation v. Llanfyllin Union Assessment Committee, [1899] 2 Q. P. 724; Liverpool Corporation v. Birkenhead Union (1905), 70 J. P. 146; 94 L. T. 509; Metropolitan Water Board v. City of London Assessment Committee (1909), 73 J. P. 142; 25 T. L. R. 246. And as to the rateability of a "catchment area," see Liverpool Corporation v. Chorley Union, [1913] A. C. 197; 77 J. P. 185.

works.

An authority who make a profit on their waterworks are liable to pay income tax thereon: cf. Mullingar R. D. C. v. Rowles, [1913] 2 I. R. 44, and other cases in notes to s. 211, post, p. 485. A rural authority purchased water in bulk and supplied it to several parishes, making in some cases a profit and in others a loss. It was held that for the purposes of income tax assessment each supply must be treated as a separate undertaking, and that losses could not be set off against profits (Wakefield R. D. C. v. Hall, [1912] 3 K. B. 328; 76 J. P. 437).

(d) It will be seen that s. 332, post, p. 658, prevents the water rights of proprietors from being injuriously affected without their consent; and although s. 176 enables the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act to be put in force, the better opinion seems to be that water rights cannot be purchased compulsorily. See note (a) to s. 327, post, p. 653, the evidence of Sir S. B. Provis before the Royal Commission on Market Rights and Tolls, Vol. II., Question 50, and the admission in argument in Roberts v. Gwyrfai R. D. Co., infra.

Note to
Section 51.

Rights of riparian owners.

In Bush v. Trowbridge Waterworks Co. (1875), L. R. 10 Ch. 459; 39 J. P. 660, it was held that the abstraction by a waterworks company of water from a stream did not entitle a riparian owner below to require the company to purchase his interest in the stream, but only entitled him to compensation as for land injuriously affected. But when a company had power to divert the whole of a stream, and gave notice of their intention to do so, it was held that they were bound to purchase the entire interest of the riparian owners below (Stone v. Yeovil Corporation (1876), 2 C. P. D. 99; 42 J. P. 212, following Ferrand v. Corporation of Bradford (1856), 21 Beav. 412). It is to be observed that a riparian owner has merely a right to the use of the water as it passes through his property. He cannot divert it into a reservoir for the purpose of disposing of it to the inhabitants of a town (Swindon Waterworks Co. v. Wiltshire and Berkshire Canal Navigation Co. (1875), L. R. 7 H. L. 697; 40 J. P. 804; followed in McCartney v. Londonderry and Lough Swilley Rail. Co., Ltd., [1904] A. C. 301). And a local authority possessing land on the bank of a stream have no greater right (Owen v. Davis, W. N. (1874) 175). An authority have no power, for the purpose of supplying water to their district, to alter the flow of water in a stream without the consent in writing of the lower riparian owners, as required by s. 322, post, for by so doing they are "injuriously affecting" the common law rights of such owners, and will be restrained from so doing without any proof of sensible damage (Roberts v. Gwyrfai R. D. Co., [1899] 2 Ch. 608; 64 J. P. 52). A riparian owner cannot, except as against himself, confer on another person any right to use the water, and such user is wrongful if it affects the rights of other owners (Ormerod v. Todmorden Mill Co. (1883), 11 Q. B. D. 155; 47 J. P. 532; following Stockport Waterworks Co. v. Potter (1864), 3 H. & C. 300; 31 L. J. Ex. 9). Where however, the person using it returned it to the stream unaffected in quantity or quality, an injunction was refused (Kensit v. G. E. Rail. Co. (1884), 27 Ch. D. 122).

As to rights in artificial watercourses, see Sutcliffe v. Booth (1863), 32 L. J. Q. B. 136; 27 J. P. 613; Burrows v. Lang, [1901] 2 Ch. 502; Baily v. Clark, [1902] 1 Ch. 649; Lewis v. Meredith, [1913] 1 Ch. 571, and cases therein cited, and cf. Renfry v. Natal (Surveyor General), [1896] A. C. 558.

A canal company under a special Act acquired an undertaking for maintaining the navigation of the rivers D. and C. The water of the rivers was not expressly vested in them. The defendants owned land adjoining the C., and for more than twenty years had abstracted large quantities of water for railway purposes. In an action to restrain them from abstracting water in breach of the public rights in the navigation, the defendants disputed the canal company's ownership of the water; alternatively they set up a prescriptive right; but they disclaimed any right to interfere with the canal company's statutory powers and duties. It was held that, having regard to such disclaimer, the canal company having no property in the water had no title to sue; and that no question of prescription arose. But, had it done so, quere whether NEVILLE, J., was right in holding that the prescriptive claim was vitiated by the fact that the defendants had taken water for many years without saying that they were taking only surplus water, and therefore might have been taking water which was not superfluous (Att.-Gen. and Sheffield, etc. Navigation Co. v. G. N. Rail. Co., [1909] 1 Ch. 775; 73 J. P. 41).

Where a waterworks company were empowered by local Acts to take and use certain water on condition of their making a compensation reservoir for storing the water during floods for the benefit of millowners lower down, it was held that they were bound to return the water from such reservoir without fouling it (Cloves v. Staffordshire Potteries Co. (1872), L. R. 8 Ch. 125; 36 J. P. 760). Cases as to "compensation water."

A local authority, predecessors in title of the defendants, were empowered by special Act to construct a reservoir, and for that purpose to divert a stream which fed a watercourse that flowed for some distance across the plaintiff's lands and supplied a company (his lessees) with water for the purposes of their works. The Act provided that the authority should permit "the owners, lessees and occupiers" of the works to take compensation water along the watercourse not exceeding a specified quantity "during any working day," and imposed liability in damages if the authority failed to permit the due quantity of compensation water to flow into the watercourse. In 1890 the company ceased to use their works and subsequently dismantled them and surrendered their lease. Meanwhile the watercourse gradually fell into disuse and disrepair, so that the water escaped and did not reach the site of the works; and in 1909 the defendants diverted the stream and prevented water from flowing into the watercourse. In an action by the plaintiff claiming a declaration of his right to the compensation water under the Act and an injunction to restrain the defendants from diverting or interfering with the flow of water to the watercourse, it was held, that on the true construction of the Act the grant of compensation water was to the plaintiff and others as "the owners lessees and occupiers" of the works, and was not limited as to the purposes for which the water was to be used; that "any working days" meant the days of the week other than Sundays and holidays; that the non-user of the compensation water whilst it was not wanted was not of itself evidence of any abandonment by the plaintiff of his rights, and that he was entitled to the uninterrupted flow of the specified quantity of compensation water to the site of the works; but that, as no present damage had resulted from the diversion of the water, an injunction would not be granted (Hanbury v. Llanfrechfa Upper U. D. C. (1911), 75 J. P. 307; 9 L. G. R. 360).

Note to

A corporation were empowered by a local Act to construct and maintain certain waterworks and to appropriate certain streams and waters. The Act provided that as compensation for the taking of the water the corporation should cause to flow from a reservoir a specified quantity of water, and further provided that in case of neglect by or in consequence of which the compensation water should not so flow "the corporation should for every day on which such neglect occurred forfeit and pay to the occupiers of each of the mills and works affected thereby (who might sue for and recover the same) the sum of five pounds, and should, in addition, make compensation for any loss, damage or injury sustained by such occupiers, or any of them, in respect of which such penalties were an insufficient compensation, and such occupiers might respectively from time to time recover such compensation . . . in any court of competent jurisdiction." Eight mill occupiers, alleging that by reason of neglect the specified quantity of water did not flow for a period of forty-three days, each claimed £215. It was proved that there was sufficient water in the reservoir to enable the corporation to send down the statutory quantity, and that the pipes, if not defective, were sufficient to carry down the water; that such pipes require care and attention from time to time, but that they had not been inspected for thirty years. It was held that the evidence established a prima facie case of neglect, and cast upon the corporation the burden of proving that they had used reasonable care. It was also held that, in case of neglect, the corporation were liable to pay £5 per day to each of the occupiers of the mills, and that therefore each of the plaintiffs was entitled to recover the amount claimed (Beaumont and Others v. Huddersfield Corporation (1902), 67 J. P. 57; 19 T. L. R. 97). In a later case arising under the same local Act (which incorporated the provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847) it was held that the provision for the payment of penalties was not punitive, but compensatory, and that the occupiers of mills could maintain an action in the High Court for the recovery of the penalties (Meltham Spinning Co., Ltd. v. Huddersfield Corporation (1903), 67 J. P. 445; 89 L. T. 403). See also a more recent case where the court held that the penalties were punitive and not compensatory, and that the justices might therefore reduce same under the S. J. A., 1879 (Davies-Cooke v. Hawarden and District Waterworks Co. (1907), 71 J. P. 223; 96 L. T. 906).

As to the effect of a covenant to keep "works" in repair in consideration of the grant of an easement to take water, see Evan-Thomas v. Neath Corporation (1912), 76 J. P. 397.

The Commissioners of Woods may with the consent of the Treasury release to, or waive in favour of, any local authority any water rights exercisable by, or reserved to, the Crown (Crown Lands Act, 1894, s. 8). Note to Section 51.

As to abstraction from underground streams, see the notes to s. 17, ante, p. 73.

(f) A landowner supplying water to her own tenants, agreed with the rural authority to supply two villages upon the same terms upon which she supplied her tenants. In consequence, however, of a report by their medical officer, the authority entered into further negotiations with the landowner and with a neighbouring corporation in reference to the supply. The landowner then gave three months' notice to the consumers of water in the two villages (other than her tenants) that she would at the expiration of that time cease to supply them. The authority applied for an injunction against her, and proved that water could not be procured from wells in the district, and that a wholesome supply could only be otherwise procured from a long distance. NORTH, J., granted the injunction on the ground that the notice given was not reasonable under the circumstances (Hunslet Union (Guardians of) v. Ingram (1893), Times, March 27th). Contracts "for supply."

The L. G. B. have expressed the opinion that a district council may, if they see fit, give a water company within whose area of supply their district is situate, a guarantee such as will ensure the receipt by the company of the minimum revenue recognised in s. 35 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, and they may enter into contracts for the supply of water in pursuance of which specified payments may be made to the company.

If a loan is required for the construction of works dependent upon the supply of water under a contract with a company or authority it is essential that the supply should be guaranteed for a number of years. The term ordinarily allowed by the L. G. B. for the repayment of loans for waterworks purposes, other than machinery, is thirty years.

52. Before commencing to construct waterworks (a) within the limits of supply of any water company empowered by Act of Parliament or any order confirmed by Parliament (b) to supply water, the local authority shall give written notice to every water company (c) within whose limits of supply the local authority are desirous of supplying water, stating the purposes for which and (as far as may be practicable) the extent to which water is required by the local authority. Restriction on construction of waterworks by local authority.

It shall not be lawful for the local authority to construct any waterworks (a) within such limits if and so long as any such company are able and willing to supply water proper and sufficient for all reasonable purposes for which it is required by the local authority; and any difference as to whether the water which any such company are able and willing (d) to lay on is proper and sufficient for the purposes for which it is required, or whether the purposes for which it is required are reasonable (e), or (if and so far as the charges of the company are not regulated by Parliament) as to the terms of supply, shall be settled by arbitration in manner provided by this Act (f).

(a) See note (c) to last section. The word "waterworks" here means new waterworks, and does not apply to additions to or improvements of substantial waterworks previously existing, as, for instance, the construction of an additional reservoir (Cleveland Water Co. v. Redcar L. B., [1895] 1 Ch. 168; 59 J. P. 7). This decision was approved, but held inapplicable, in Huddersfield Corporation v. Ravensthorpe U. D. C., [1897] 2 Ch. 121; 61 J. P. 596. In that case an authority with an existing waterworks system, having had an area added to their district by order of the county council, proceeded to lay pipes for the supply of such area. It was held that this was a constructing of waterworks within the meaning of the section, so that notice should have been given to the plaintiffs whose limits What works come within the section.

Note to

of supply included the added area, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction. In the order of the county council, no express provision was made as to the supply of water in the added area. This might possibly have been made. See Brighton Intercepting and Outfall Sewers Board v. Hove Corporation (1904), 68 J. P. 56; 520 T. L. R. 760). The section does not apply to the construction of works by an authority for the supply of water for their own use, as for flushing sewers (West Surrey Water Co. v. Guardians of Chertsey Union, [1894] 3 Ch. 513; 58 J. P. 167).

company."

(b) In the P. H. A., 1848, s. 75, the word established only was used, and though the law officers of the Crown had advised that this meant established by Act of Parliament, that opinion had not been judicially confirmed. The text, however, confirms that view for the future. It is presumed that the Act of Parliament referred to is a special Act, and that the Order is a Provisional Order of the Board of Trade respectively applying to the particular company.

The undertaking of a water company was transferred by statute to a borough. The profits of the waterworks were under a later Act to be transferred to the borough improvement fund, or, at the option of the corporation, applied in reducing the price of water. It was held that the corporation were supplying water for their own profit, and were a "water company" within the meaning of this section (Wolverhampton Corporation v. Bilston (Commissioners of), [1891] 1 Ch. 315). This point was not argued, however, in the Court of Appeal (7 T. L. R. 374).

necessary.

(c) See s. 266 as to this notice. If notice be not given, the authority will be liable to an injunction.

The water company must be such a company as is previously mentioned in the section, for only such a company can be said to have limits of supply.

In many cases companies have been established for the supply of water, but have not acted on their powers, or have failed to carry their powers into effect. Nevertheless, it seems that notice should be given to them. Many recent Acts and Orders, however, empowering companies to supply water within specified limits, provide that if water is not brought to such places within a certain period the authority shall be freed from the restrictions imposed by s. 52.

"Able and
supply water.

(d) A company is not able and willing within the meaning of this section, unless it has both the necessary powers and the necessary supply of water. The R. company had the necessary powers, but no water, and the S. company had the necessary water, but no powers within the district. The R. company sold its plant to the S. company, and certain members of company S. bought all the shares of company R. with the intention of allowing company S. to exercise the powers of company R. It was held that the powers could not be so delegated, and that neither company was able and willing within the meaning of the Act (Richmond Waterworks Co. v. Vestry of Richmond (1876), 3 Ch. D. 82). In Newhaven and Seaford Water Co. v. Newhaven L. B. (L. T. Journ. (1882), p. 226), HALL, V.-C., held that a company were "able and willing," within the meaning of this section, though their works were only in progress, and they had no completed works available for the supply of water. It seems doubtful whether the ability and willingness of the company is a question which the arbitrators under the section have jurisdiction to decide (Bognor Water Co. v. Bognor L. B. (1894), 70 L. T. 402, and see Re Yeadon L. B. and Yeadon Waterworks Co. (1889), 41 Ch. D. 52; reversing 59 L. T. 844).

Arbitration.

(e) The arbitrator must determine what are reasonable purposes. The term is in itself somewhat vague.

(f) See s. 179, post, p. 424. The plaintiffs' special Act rendered it unlawful for the defendant board to construct waterworks within the plaintiffs' limits of supply during four years after the passing of the Act, so long as the plaintiffs were able and willing to supply water proper and sufficient. The plaintiffs made some unsuccessful attempts to find water, and before they succeeded, the defendants served them with notice of their intention to construct waterworks under the P. H. A., 1875, unless they were informed within one month that the plaintiffs were able and willing to supply the water. The matter went to arbitration, but the company, finding that the board were still forwarding a scheme of water supply, moved for an injunction to restrain them from commencing or threatening to construct works, and from proceeding to arbitration. The motion stood over to await the award, which was given in favour of the plaintiffs:—Held, that the defendants must pay the costs of the action, setting off any costs incurred by them by reason of the plaintiffs seeking to restrain the arbitration (Bognor Water Co. v. Bognor L. B., supra).

Note to
Section 52.

53. At least two months (a) before commencing to construct under the provisions of this Act (b) any reservoir (other than a service reservoir or tank which will hold not more than one hundred thousand gallons (c)) the local authority shall give notice (d) of the intended work by advertisement in one or more of the local newspapers circulated within the district where the reservoir is to be constructed (e). As to construction of reservoirs.

If any person who would be affected by the intended work objects to such work, and serves notice in writing of such objection on the local authority (f) at any time within the said two months, the intended work shall not be commenced without the sanction of the Local Government Board, after such inquiry as hereinafter mentioned, unless such objection is withdrawn (g).

The Local Government Board may, on application (h) of the local authority, appoint an inspector to make inquiry (i) on the spot into the propriety of the intended work and into the objections thereto, and to report to the Local Government Board on the matters with respect to which such inquiry was directed; and on receiving the report of such inspector, the Local Government Board may make an order disallowing or allowing with such modifications (if any) as they may deem necessary the intended work (k).

(a) I.e., calendar months; see 52 & 53 Vict. c. 63, s. 3. The section does not prevent the authority purchasing land for the purpose. As, however, the land would be useless if an objection were sustained to the erection of a reservoir thereon, such a course is inadvisable, and the L. G. B. would probably not sanction a loan for the purchase until the section had been satisfied.

(b) Presumably these words are to be construed so as to apply to powers acquired before the Act was passed (see s. 326, post, p. 652), but the point is far from clear.

(c) See the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863, in App. I., for provisions as to the protection of reservoirs. See also s. 68, post, p. 143. An enlargement of an existing service reservoir whereby it will hold a total volume of more than 100,000 gallons may be regarded as the construction of a new reservoir for the purposes of the section, and notices should be given.

(d) See as to this notice, ss. 266, 267, post, p. 590. If this notice be not given, proceedings may be stayed by injunction, and the expenditure would be unlawful. If the land had not been already obtained, probably it could not be legally acquired.

(e) Generally the newspaper circulating in the district of the local authority will suffice, but if the reservoir is to be out of the district, it may be necessary to advertise in a different newspaper.

(f) Section 267 provides for the service of notices, but appears to apply rather to notices by the local authority than to notices to them. The person affected must, as it seems, be so affected in his land or some interest therein.

(g) Although there be no notice of objection, if the local authority require a loan, they must obtain the sanction of the L. G. B. and furnish due proofs of compliance with the section. This sanction will not be given without due inquiry. See s. 233, post, p. 519, and the notes thereon.

Note to
Section 53.

(h) This application (which should be deferred until the two months have expired) should be made in writing, signed by the clerk, and the following particulars must be furnished: A copy of a resolution of the authority directing the application, a copy of the newspaper containing the advertisement of the notice, and copies of the notices of objection served on the council.

(i) As to inquiries by the L. G. B., see s. 293, post, p. 622.

(k) It does not appear that this order can deal with the interests of persons affected by the works, but their interests may be such as to cause the Board to disallow the proposal.

carrying mains.

54. Where a local authority supply water within their district, they shall have the same powers and be subject to the same restrictions for carrying water mains within or without their district (a) as they have and are subject to for carrying sewers within or without their district respectively by the law for the time being in force (b).

As to the distinction between "mains" and "service pipes," see Whittington Gas Light and Coke Co. v. Chesterfield Gas and Water Board, [1914] 2 Ch. 146.

(a) These words enable the water to be brought from any distance to the district.

(b) See s. 16, ante, p. 55, as to sewers within the district, and ss. 32 et seq., ante, p. 93, as to sewers without the district. See also Jones v. Conway and Colwyn Bay Joint Water Supply Board, ante, p. 59, as to water mains without the district; and see as to the powers conferred by this section, East Molesey L. B. v. Lambeth Waterworks Co., [1892] 3 Ch. 289; Hill v. Wallasey L. B., cited in the notes to s. 57, post, p. 130.

As to supply of water.

55. A local authority shall provide and keep in any waterworks constructed or purchased by them a supply of pure and wholesome water (a); and where a local authority lay any pipes for the supply of any of the inhabitants of their district, the water may be constantly laid on at such pressure as will carry the same to the top storey of the highest dwelling-house within the district or part of the district supplied (b).

"Pure and wholesome"
supply

(a) This is compulsory upon the authority, and as to their default herein, see s. 299, post, p. 629. Compare also the provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 35. As to the purposes for which the authority are bound to supply water, see the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 53, and the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863, ss. 12, 13. These sections are set out in App. I., post.

The defendants were empowered by special Act incorporating (with the exception of certain provisions) the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, to supply water for domestic use within the limits and from the sources described by the Act. By the Act the defendants were entitled to prescribe the material to be used for service pipes by persons supplied with water, and by byelaws they prescribed that the material might either be lead or cast-iron. Service pipes of lead were, upon the application and at the expense of the plaintiff and his landlord, laid down by the defendants from their mains to the plaintiff's house. The service pipes when laid belonged to the consumer of the water supplied through them. By the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 35, "the undertakers shall provide and keep in the pipes to be laid down by them a supply of pure and wholesome water, sufficient for the domestic use of all the inhabitants of the town or district within the limits of the special Act, who . . . shall be entitled to demand a supply, and shall be willing to pay water rate for the same." Water, which was pure and wholesome in the mains of the defendants, was supplied by them to the plaintiff, but in its passage through the service pipes it was contaminated by the lead, and he contracted lead poisoning. In an action against the defendants for injuries sustained from impure and unwholesome water :—Held, that he had no cause of action (Milnes v. Huddersfield Corporation (1886), 11 App. Cas. 511 ; 50 J. P. 676).

Note to
Section 55.

As to the mode of enforcing the duty of a water company to supply pure water, see Att.-Gen. v. North Shields Waterworks Co., Times, May 12th, 1892 ; Att.-Gen. v. Rhymney and Aber Valleys Gas and Water Co. (1907), 71 J. P. 435 : Att.-Gen. v. Pontypridd Waterworks Co., [1908] 1 Ch. 388 ; 72 J. P. 48).

(b) It is, however, in the discretion of the authority whether they will act upon “Constant this provision, and they will be guided by the state of the district, and the high- facilities for obtaining water, so as to be able to raise it to the requisite height. pressure” It is to be observed that the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, ss. 35 and 42, as to high pressure are not incorporated in this Act. The authority are not, therefore, under any obligation to supply water at high pressure by reason of those sections. See Purnell v. Wolverhampton New Waterworks Co. (1861), 10 C. B. (N.S.) 576. In Finchley L. B. v. Barnet District Gas and Water Co., Times, February 9th, 1893, a question arose as to the liability of a water company to keep water constantly laid on. The special Acts of the company incorporated the Waterworks Clauses Acts, 1847 and 1863, so far as applicable, and provided that the water need not be constantly laid on under pressure, except that on the application of a local authority the company might be required to provide a constant supply within so much of their district as could be supplied from their reservoir, but not higher than 300 feet above the ordnance datum level. It was contended that this provision did not relieve the company from the liability imposed by ss. 35, 37, 42 of the Act of 1847 of supplying water at high pressure for domestic purposes and for use at fires. But it was held that the case of Purnell v. Wolverhampton New Waterworks Co., supra, was a direct authority to show that words such as those used in the special Act exempted a company from keeping a supply under pressure for fire purposes ; that the principle underlying such decision showed that the exemption extended also to the keeping of a constant supply ; and that under the local Acts, if the plaintiff board desired to have water for fire always laid on, they could secure it by entering into the necessary agreements and making the prescribed payments. See also Liverpool Corporation v. Brady (1897), 14 T. L. R. 11.

It has been held that the statutory requirements as to the supply of water at pressure contained in the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 35, do not apply to the supply of water in bulk, and that the duty of a waterworks company ended with the supply of water at a given point (Wombwell U. D. C. v. Dearne Valley Waterworks Co. (1907), 71 J. P. 415 ; 5 L. G. R. 1132).

In Kyffin v. East London Water Co., [1896] 1 Q. B. 446 ; 60 J. P. 230, it was held that upon a true construction of the Metropolis Water Act, 1871, it was for the metropolitan authority of the district, and not for an individual householder, to proceed for penalties under the Act. A householder aggrieved by an insufficient water supply could only recover penalties under s. 43 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847.

56. Where a local authority supply water to any premises they may (a) charge in respect of such supply a water rate (b) to be assessed on the net annual value (c) of the premises ascertained in the manner by this Act prescribed with respect to general district rates (d) ; moreover they may enter into agreements (e) for supplying water on such terms as may be agreed on between them and the persons receiving the supply, and shall have the same powers for recovering water rents or other payments accruing under such agreements as they have for recovering water rates (f).

charge water rates and rents.

(a) But by the Public Health (Water) Act, 1878, s. 10, post, p. 707, “where a sanitary authority under the provisions of the Public Health Act, 1875, as amended by this Power of ratepayers to require water

Note to
Section 56.

rates or water rents to be charged.

Act, supply water in any urban district or in any contributory place, and an application is made to them by any ten persons rated to the relief of the poor in such urban district, or by any five persons so rated in such contributory place, to charge water rates or water rents in respect of the water so supplied, it shall be incumbent upon the authority to exercise the powers given to them by the Public Health Act, 1875, and by this Act, of charging water rates or water rents in respect of all water supplied by them in such urban district or in such contributory place." But consumers cannot dictate to the authority whether the charge shall take the form of a rent or a rate. See a county court case in Local Government Chronicle, 1912, p. 766, where a consumer who considered that rates ought to be charged instead of rents, refused to sign any agreement, but was held liable to pay for water used by him as upon an implied agreement to pay a reasonable price for it. As to the power of an authority to charge rates or rents in respect of water supplied from standpipes, see ss. 9, 11 of the same Act, post, pp. 706, 707.

or uniform.

(b) The N. Corporation purchased the undertaking of the N. Waterworks Co. under a local Act which empowered them to charge for the supply of water for domestic use to any dwelling-house a sum not exceeding $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum on the net rateable value of such dwelling-house. The company's special Act provided that "the company may from time to time supply any person with water for any purpose for which such supply may be required, for such remuneration, and upon such terms and conditions, as shall be agreed upon between the company and the person desirous of having such supply of water, under a special agreement," and this power was transferred to the corporation. There was no express provision in either Act requiring equality of rating in respect of the supply of water. The corporation charged for the supply for domestic purposes at the rate of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. upon the net rateable value of the dwelling-houses in one part of their district, and at the rate of 5 per cent. in another part. It was held that they were not bound to charge at an equal rate in the pound to all consumers (Northampton Corporation v. Ellen, [1904] 1 K. B. 299; 68 J. P. 197).

Notwithstanding the above decision, the L. G. B. appear to consider that in a rural district a water rate levied under s. 10 of the Act of 1878 should, throughout any one contributory place, be a uniform assessment on the net annual value of the premises supplied with water, ascertained by the valuation list. They do not, however, consider it necessary that the water rates should be on precisely the same scale in the several contributory places.

See note (e) as to allowing discount for prompt payment of water rates.

value."

(c) See the definition of net annual value in s. 4, ante, p. 15. This definition precludes the difficulties of construction which arose as to the meaning of annual value in Warrington Waterworks Co. v. Longshaw (1882), 9 Q. B. D. 145; 46 J. P. 773; New River Co. v. Mather (1875), L. R. 10 C. P. 442; 39 J. P. 614; Dobbs v. Grand Junction Waterworks Co. (1883), 9 App. Cas. 49; 48 J. P. 5, and South Staffordshire Waterworks Co. v. Barrow (1897), 61 J. P. 661. And see the cases cited in the notes to 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, s. 68, in App. I., post, p. 1421. For the calculation of the annual value where an owner is assessed, see Smith v. Birmingham (Corporation of) (1883), 11 Q. B. D. 195; 47 J. P. 645. As to alterations in "value" during a quarter, see Metropolitan Water Board v. Phillips, [1913] A. C. 86; 77 J. P. 73.

(d) As to the manner prescribed, see s. 211, post, p. 477.

rate.

In Worcester Corporation v. Droitwich Assessment Committee (1876), 2 Ex. D. 47, 60; 41 J. P. 355, which was decided with reference to the P. H. A., 1848, MELLISH, L.J., said: "We think that the corporation in making a water rate are bound to make an estimate of the sum they actually require for the maintenance of their waterworks, and cannot legally levy a larger sum by a water rate than the sum they so require." But notwithstanding this dictum, it is submitted that an authority may out of the water rates pay all or part of the expense of providing as well as maintaining the waterworks and of repaying instalments of principal and interest of money borrowed for the purpose of providing the supply. This view is confirmed by the language of s. 229, post, p. 509, defining special expenses. The L. G. B. state that in their opinion the cost of a scheme of water supply may, and should as far as practicable, be thrown upon the consumers of the water by the charge of either water rates or water rents.

Note to
Section 56.

(e) These should be in writing and under seal except in urban districts where the amount does not exceed £50, in which case the seal is unnecessary. See per Lord BRAMWELL in Young v. Leamington Corporation (1883), 8 App. Cas. 517, 522; 47 J. P. 660. As to stamping agreement, see West Middlesex Waterworks Co. v. Suwerkropp (1829), 4 C. & P. 87; Gurr v. Scudds (1855), 11 Ex. 190; Stamp Act, 1891, Sched. 1, exemption of agreement for sale of goods; and County of Durham Electrical Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, [1909] 2 K. B. 604; 73 J. P. 425, where it was held that an agreement for the supply of electric power for a term of years on payment of a fixed charge per quarter and also one penny per unit is a security for a sum of money at stated periods, and chargeable with duty at the rate of 2s. 6d. per cent. on the aggregate amount of the minimum annual payments.

Agreements
for supply.

The L. G. B. have stated that where water is supplied by agreement and paid for by a water rent, there does not appear to be anything to prevent the district council from including in the agreement a stipulation that if the rent is paid before a specified date a deduction or discount shall be allowed; but that where the water is not supplied by agreement, and payment for it is made by means of a water rate assessed on the net annual value of the premises supplied, such an arrangement would not be applicable.

See s. 58, post, p. 131, as to agreements to supply water by measure.

(f) See next section. Observe the distinction between water rents which are payable under a special agreement, and water rates which are chargeable on the net annual value of the premises without any such agreement. Another example of a water rent will be found in s. 58, post, p. 131.

57. For the purpose of enabling any local authority to supply water there shall be incorporated with this Act the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (a), and the following provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (b); (namely,)

of certain provisions of the Waterworks
Clauses Acts.

“With respect” (where the local authority have not the control of the street) (c) “to the breaking up of streets for the purpose of laying pipes”; (d) and

“With respect to the communication pipes to be laid by the undertakers”; and

“With respect to the communication pipes to be laid by the inhabitants”; and

“With respect to waste or misuse of the water supplied by the undertakers”; and

“With respect to the provision for guarding against fouling the water of the undertakers”; and

Provided—

That the provisions with respect to the communication pipes to be laid by the undertakers and the inhabitants respectively shall apply only in districts or parts of districts where the local authority lay any pipes for the supply of any of the inhabitants thereof; and

That any dispute authorised or directed by any of the said incorporated provisions to be settled by an inspector or two justices shall be settled by a court of summary jurisdiction; (f) and

That section forty-four of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (g), shall for the purposes of this Act have effect as if the words “with the consent in writing of the owner or reputed owner of any such house, or of the agent of such owner," were omitted therefrom; and any rent for pipes and works paid by an occupier under that section may be deducted by him from any rent from time to time due from him to such owner (h).

(a) That is 26 & 27 Vict. c. 93. See the statute in App. I.

(b) That is 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, ss. 28—34, 44—53, 54—60, 61—67, and 68—74. These sections are printed in App. I. With respect to the incorporation of parts of Acts by reference to the heading, see Ferrar v. Commissioners of Sewers of London (1869), L. R. 4 Ex. 227; Hammersmith Rail. Co. v. Brand (1869), L. Power of authority
to make

On the subject of the powers of both urban and rural district councils to make regulations with respect to the supply of water by them, the L. G. B. have pointed out that district councils are not empowered to make regulations enforceable by penalties. The Board draw attention, however, to the fact that s. 57 of the P. H. A., 1875, incorporates certain provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act of 1847, as well as the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863, and that the provisions thus incorporated enable a district council to control in many important particulars the fittings and apparatus on the premises supplied by them with water. As examples, the Board refer to s. 48 of the Act of 1847, which gives the council power to approve of the strength and material of the communication pipes to be laid by the owner or occupier of a dwelling-house; s. 49, which provides for the proper superintendence by their officer of the work of connecting these pipes with the pipes belonging to the council; and s. 50, which enables them to prescribe a maximum limit to the bore of service pipes. For the prevention of waste or misuse of the water supplied by the council, effectual provision has, the Board observe, been made in such enactments as ss. 54—60 of the Act of 1847, and ss. 16—20 of the Act of 1863, while the powers of inspection conferred by such provisions as those in s. 57 of the Act of 1847 and s. 15 of the Act of 1863 may be expected to afford the council a ready means of ascertaining whether each of the persons whom they may supply with water complies with the requirements of the statutes.

Where district councils contemplate making regulations in the matter, the Board think that the council might be advised to draw up an abstract from the provisions above referred to, or series of extracts from them. To this abstract or selection of sections they might with advantage append a description of the fittings which in their opinion would satisfy the requirements of the Acts. No approval or confirmation of such abstract or extracts on the part of the Board is required, or could be given by them.

break open private

(c) These words are descriptive of an authority who have not the control of the streets generally in their district. The plaintiff was the owner of a private road in the urban district of the defendants, who had the control of the streets generally in the district, and also the power of supplying the inhabitants with water. The defendants commenced, without the plaintiff's consent, to break up his private road for the purpose of laying down water mains:—Held, as above, by the Court of Appeal (A. L. SMITH, L.J., diss.), and that the defendants had power under ss. 16 and 54 to lay down pipes in the plaintiff's private road without his consent, making him compensation under s. 308 (Hill v. Wallasey L. B., [1894] 1 Ch. 133). Since the passing of the L. G. A., 1894, under which rural district councils became highway authorities, the words in question have little, if any, application.

The L. G. B. consider that apart from some special statutory authority private persons and companies have no power to break up public highways even with the consent of the district council; but see as to this, Edgware Highway Board v. Harrow District Gas Co. and cases cited therewith on pp. 280, 281, post.

Liability for leaking pipes.

(d) A water company having laid a pipe under the surface of a highway, a leak occurred and the water oozed out. A builder, who had contracted with the owner—of the soil of the highway and of the adjoining lands, to make a tunnel under the road, was delayed in his work and suffered damage by reason of the leakage. It was held that (assuming the owner could have maintained an action for damage to his property) the builder's loss of profit on his contract gave him no right of action against the company (Cattle v. Stockton Waterworks Co. (1875), L. R. 10 Q. B. 453; 39 J. P. 791). And see the cases cited in the notes to s. 19, ante, p. 74.

Note to
Section 57.

(e) Provision for the recovery of water rates is found in 26 & 27 Vict. c. 93, s. 21, in addition to those in 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17. It has been held that, notwithstanding the incorporation of the provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, as to the recovery of water rates, a water rent due under an agreement for supply of water is a "rate made under this Act" within the meaning of s. 256, post, p. 562, and that the period of limitation applicable to the recovery thereof commences to run on a failure to pay within fourteen days after demand (Elliott v. Russell, [1902] 2 K. B. 748; 67 J. P. 158).

Recovery of water rates
and rents.

(f) See the definition, ante, p. 36.

(g) See App. I., post, p. 1405.

(h) Query whether this will overrule any covenants by lessees to bear charges leviable upon lessors, as to which see notes on ss. 104, 226, post, pp. 186, 505. The language is only permissive, and may, possibly, be provided for by express covenant. As to whether the deduction must be made from the next rent due, see note on s. 214, post, p. 493.

58. A local authority may agree with any person to supply water by measure, and as to the payment to be made in the form of rent (a) or otherwise for every meter provided by them; they shall at all times at their own expense keep all meters and other instruments for measuring water let by them for hire to any person in proper order for correctly registering the supply of water, and in default of their so doing such person shall not be liable to pay rent for the same during such time as such default continues. The local authority shall for the purposes aforesaid have access to and be at liberty at all reasonable times to remove test inspect and replace any such meter or other instrument.

by measure.

(a) This agreement must provide for the payments for the supply of the water, for the use of the meter, and for the penalties in respect of the breaches mutually. It does not appear that there is any summary means of recovering the rent for the meter, but the amount due from time to time will be dealt with as rent due between landlord and tenant, and must be recovered by the ordinary civil process, though apparently there cannot be any distress.

The agreement.

This provision for the supply of water by measure was new, so far as the previous sanitary Acts went, though it is found in many local water Acts.

The S. water company were authorised to receive payment by measure, and not by a rate, for water supplied to fixed baths in private houses. There was no express provision in their special Acts or in the Waterworks Clauses Acts as to how the water for such a purpose was to be measured, or whether the company or the consumer was to bear the cost of providing a meter; but by the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863, s. 14, when the company supply water by measure, they may let to a consumer a meter for such remuneration as they may agree upon:—Held, that a consumer taking water for a fixed bath in his private house, was bound at his own expense to measure the water so used by some automatic and self-registering meter or other instrument, or in some other equally accurate way, and to record the amount from time to time taken (Sheffield Waterworks Co. v. Bingham (1884), 25 Ch. D. 443, followed in Dublin (Corporation of) v. Bray Commissioners, [1900] 2 I. R. 88). PEARSON, J., who decided Sheffield Waterworks Co. v. Bingham, supra, expressly distinguished it from Sheffield Waterworks Co. v. Carter, and The Same v. Brooks (1882), 8 Q. B. D. 632; 46 J. P. 548. In the first of these cases the facts were as follows: The special Act provided for the supply of water for "family use" at certain rates calculated on the rental of the house supplied. It contained meter.

Note to

further provisions for the supply of water to schools, manufactories, etc., and for purposes other than family consumption, and for baths, etc., and for the purposes of any trade or business whatsoever, at certain rates per thousand gallons. The supply of water having been held obligatory upon the company unless prevented by causes beyond their control, it was held that, there being no provision in the special Act throwing upon the consumer the obligation of providing a meter to measure the water supplied for the purposes of a bath, no such obligation could be implied from s. 14 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (supra), incorporated with the special Act. In the second case the occupier of a house had a bath connected by means of a pipe with the house cistern, to which water was conveyed from the main for family use. The company required him to put up a meter for the purpose of measuring the water used for the bath, but he refused to do so. He had paid to the company in advance the proper amount in respect of the water supplied for family use for the quarter ending September 29th, but had not paid or tendered any sum in respect of the water supply to the bath for the same period. The company, in consequence of his refusal to put up a meter or disconnect the bath, cut off the communication pipe from the main to his house upon September 20th. On September 29th, having cut off the pipe connecting the cistern with the bath, but not the waste or outlet pipe from the bath, he gave notice to the company of what he had done, and paid to them in advance the proper amount for the supply of water for family use during the ensuing quarter, but did not restore the communication pipe between the main and his cistern. The company refused to restore the supply, on the ground that he had not cut off the waste pipe from the bath, which he refused to do. The supply of water was not renewed till November 4th, when the company restored the communication pipe under protest. It was held that the company were not entitled to insist on the consumers providing a meter, but that they were not liable to a penalty under the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 43, for not supplying water during the period from September 20th to September 29th, inasmuch as no tender or payment in respect of the water supply to the bath for such period had been made. But it was held that they were liable to a penalty in respect of the period subsequent to September 29th: that they had no right to refuse the supply of water after that date, and that they were not justified in cutting off the supply, and were, therefore, not entitled to require the consumer to renew the communication. These cases show that the agreement to supply water by measure under the above section must contain express stipulations, as to the provision and rent of the meter. In the absence of such stipulations, it is submitted that the consumer cannot be compelled to provide or to pay rent for a meter, though he may be bound to provide some automatic and self-registering instrument to keep a record of the water used. And see Weaver v. Cardiff (Corporation of) (1883), 48 L. T. 906.

For a case where a covenant to give a free supply to a "farm house" was held determined by its conversion into a mansion, see Hadham R. D. C. v. Crallan, [1914] 2 Ch. 138.

For a case where a contract to take water by meter was implied from the circumstances as to the supply in the past, see Trowbridge Water Co. v. Wilts C.C., [1909] 1 K. B. 824; 73 J. P. 280.

As to the stamping of such agreements, see note (e) to s. 56, p. 129, ante.

See Stanley Bros. v. Nuneaton Corporation (1913), 77 J. P. 342, for a case where customers having under a mistake as to the effect of an agreement paid too high a price for water failed to recover the excess.

When water is supplied by measure it is the subject of larceny (Ferens v. O'Brien (1883), 11 Q. B. D. 21; 47 J. P. 472).

Larceny of
water.

Register of meter to be evidence.

59. Where water is supplied by measure by any local authority, the register of the meter or other instrument for measuring water shall be prima facie evidence of the quantity of water consumed; and if the local authority and the consumer differ with respect to the quantity consumed, the difference shall be determined, on the application of either party, by a court of summary jurisdiction (a), and such court may order by which of the parties the costs of the proceedings before them shall be paid, and its decision shall be final and binding (b). Section 59.

(a) See the definition, ante, p. 36.

(b) These costs will be a civil debt within the meaning of the S. J. A., 1879, ss. 6, 35, 47. and payment of them may be enforced accordingly. See s. 251, post, p. 550, and the notes thereon.

60. If any person wilfully or by culpable negligence injures or suffers to be injured any meter or fittings belonging to a local authority, or fraudulently alters the index to any meter, or prevents any meter from duly registering the quantity of water supplied, or fraudulently abstracts or uses water of the local authority, he shall (without prejudice to any other right or remedy of the local authority) be liable to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings (a), and the local authority may, in addition thereto, recover the amount of any damage sustained (b). The existence of artificial means, under the control of the consumer, for causing any such alteration prevention abstraction or use shall be evidence (c) that the consumer has fraudulently effected the same. Penalty for injuring meters.

(a) See, as to the recovery of penalties, s. 251, post, p. 550. The authority may have some other right or remedy under the agreement, as to which see s. 58 and note (a) thereto. There may, too, be a criminal remedy for larceny of the water under certain circumstances. See Ferens v. O'Brien, ante, p. 132.

(b) The amount of the damage is not a penalty, and payment of it will apparently have to be enforced as a civil debt under the S. J. A., 1879, if it is recovered at the same time and in the same proceeding, as the section appears to intend.

(c) This is only prima facie, not conclusive, evidence or proof.

61. Any local authority for the time being supplying water within their own district may, with the sanction of the Local Government Board, supply water to the local authority of any adjoining (a) district on such terms as may be agreed on between such authorities, or as, in case of dispute (b), may be settled by arbitration in manner provided by this Act. Power to supply water to authority of adjoining district.

(a) As to the meaning of the word "adjoining," see Cave v. Horsell, and other cases cited therewith in notes to s. 150, post, p. 282; and Wellington Corporation v. Lower Hutt Corporation, [1904] A. C. 773, where the Privy Council considered the expression "adjacent borough . . . or district," and held that it was not confined to districts actually contiguous.

In Halifax Corporation v. Soothill Upper L. B. (1874), 31 L. T. 6, a corporation were empowered to collect all the water from the gathering grounds of a district but were bound to supply to the township of T. not less than 25,000 gallons, nor more than 75,000 gallons per day at a fixed price, the amount (between the maximum and the minimum) to be at the option of the purchaser. It was held that T. might call for more than 25,000 gallons per day for the purpose of selling part of it at a profit to a neighbouring township. Effect of the section.

The above case was decided before the present Act came into operation, and the foregoing section, which was altogether new, recognises the power of one authority to supply another with water. The L. G. B. will have to take care that the authority can properly spare the water and prevent improvident arrangements in this respect. The application to the Board must be made by the clerk, who should forward a copy of the resolution directing it and a copy of the draft agreement between the two authorities. This agreement, when sanction has been obtained, should be under seal. The section only requires the sanction of the Board to the fact of the supply, and not to the terms of the agreement (although these are considered), and it empowers the Board to give a limited sanction, i.e., for a supply to part of an authority's district, in which case a fresh sanction must be obtained, if it be desired to supply a larger part of the district (Soothill Upper U. D. C. v. Wakefield R. D. C., [1905] 2 Ch. 516 ; 69 J. P. 447). It was in the last-mentioned case also decided that an agreement to supply water in specified quantities to a district does not imply necessarily an agreement to supply water at such a pressure as will give a continuous supply at all parts of the district.

If the council receiving the supply propose to borrow money with the sanction of the L. G. B. for works of distribution, it is very important that in the agreement they should secure a right to receive the water for a definite term of years, not less than the period proposed for the repayment of the loan.

It will be observed that the water must be supplied to the authority of the "adjoining" district, and not directly to particular consumers in that district.

As to the spot at which a supply is deemed to be given and taken by a company and consumer respectively, see Att.-Gen. v. West Gloucestershire Water Co., on p. 118, ante.

In Halifax Corporation v. Morley Corporation (1894), 10 T. L. R. 454, the defendants' special Act provided that they should not either directly or indirectly supply any water, nor enter into any contract whereby water might be either directly or indirectly supplied or used within the water supply limits of the plaintiffs, nor within any place within which water was at the time of the passing of the special Act either directly or indirectly supplied by the plaintiffs. The defendants supplied water to the works of a railway company within the district of a rural authority who supplied within their own district water obtained by them from a local board which received its supply from the plaintiffs, and was so receiving it at the time of the passing of the defendants' special Act. It was held that the action of the defendants in supplying the railway company was contrary to their Act. See also Seton v. Linlithgow Burgh Commissioners (1900), 37 Sc. L. R. 715.

An Act amalgamating a railway company and a dock company provided that none of the provisions of the Acts which would have related respectively to the dock company and the railway company exclusively, if the amalgamation had not taken place, were to apply to any portion of the undertaking of the other company. Before the amalgamation the dock company had obtained its water supply from the waterworks of a neighbouring corporation. The railway company had a supply of water from land acquired for railway purposes before the amalgamation. After the amalgamation it ceased to use the corporation's water and supplied the docks with water from its own land. The corporation sought to restrain the railway company from so doing. It was held, that since the amalgamation it was not ultra vires of the railway company to use its water for the supply of the dock (Att.-Gen. v. N. E. Rail. Co., [1906] 2 Ch. 675 ; 70 J. P. 473).

(b) As this is a voluntary arrangement, it is difficult to understand how there can be any dispute, but as to the provision for arbitration, see s. 179, post, p. 424.

Where the terms arranged yield to the supplying authority a surplus over the cost to them of giving the supply, such surplus is assessable in their hands to income tax, including a part applied to a sinking fund (Harris v. Irvine Corporation (1900), 65 J. P. 663). See also Mullingar R. D. C. v. Rowles, [1913] 2 I. R. 44 ; Leeds Corporation v. Sugden and other cases as to income tax collected in the notes to s. 211, post, p. 477.

authority may require houses to be supplied with water in certain cases.

62. Where on the report of the surveyor (a) of a local (b) authority it appears to such authority that any house (c) within their district is without a proper supply of water (d), and that such a supply of water can be furnished thereto at a cost (e) not exceeding the water rate authorised by any local Act in force within the district, or where there is not any local Act so in force at a cost not exceeding twopence a week, or at such other cost as the Local Government Board may, on the application of the local authority (f'), determine under all the circumstances of the case to be reasonable (g), the local authority shall give notice in writing to the owner (h), requiring him, within a time therein specified, to obtain such supply, and to do all such works as may be necessary for that purpose. Section 62.

If such notice is not complied with within the time specified, the local authority may, if they think fit, do such works and obtain such supply, and for that purpose may enter into any contract with any water company supplying water within their district (i); and water rates (k) may be made and levied on the premises by the authority or company which furnishes the supply and may be recovered as if the owner or occupier of the premises had demanded a supply of water and were willing to pay water rates for the same; and any expenses incurred by the local authority in doing any such works may be recovered in a summary manner (l) from the owner of the premises, or may by order of the local authority be declared to be private improvement expenses (m).

(b) This section applies both to urban and rural districts. It is not repealed by the Public Health (Water) Act, 1878, post, p. 700, although that Act gives increased powers to compel the provision of a supply to houses in rural districts (Colne Valley Waterworks Co. v. Treharne (1884), 48 J. P. 279; 50 L. T. 617; see also s. 8 of the L. G. A., 1894, post, p. 979). rural districts.

(c) It is a question of fact whether premises, e.g., a "lock-up" shop, are a "house" within the meaning of the section (Wootten v. Bishop (1907), 71 J. P. 334; 96 L. T. 705).

(d) These words in former Public Health Acts were read as signifying a supply of proper water, a well containing a supply of water, but polluted, not being a "proper supply" of water. This is probably a correct interpretation of the words, though, of course, they primarily apply to the case of a mere deficiency of water. See the provision as to lodging-houses in s. 81, post, p. 154.

(e) The cost referred to is the cost of the supply of water, and is quite distinct from the expense of bringing the supply to the premises. It is to be noted also that the section appears to apply only when a supply can be obtained from the mains of a company or of the authority. This construction results from the use of the words furnished thereto, which would be inapplicable to the case of a well, etc. provided at a distance from the house; and at the latter end of the section it is provided that water rates may be levied on the premises by the authority or company supplying the water. See the evidence of the Secretary to the L. G. B. before a Select Committee of the House of Commons in 1878, at pp. 11, 12 of the report. And see per STEPHEN, J., in Southend Waterworks Co. v. Howard, infra, note (k).

The limitation as to the cost of providing a water supply to a house contained in s. 3 of the Public Health (Water) Act, 1878, does not apply to s. 62, supra. Where, under s. 62, an owner is required by the authority to obtain a water supply from an unreasonable distance, his remedy is by appeal to the L. G. B. under s. 268, post, p. 592 (West Lancashire R. D. C. v. Ogiley, [1899] 1 Q. B. 377; 63 J. P. 166).

(f) See s. 61, note (a), ante, p. 133, as to the mode of making this application.

(g) This alternative was new in 1875. Although inconvenient, it appears to be necessary that the Board should make an order separately for every case, though probably several may be embraced in the same document. The Public Health (Water) Act, 1878, s. 8, post, p. 706, provides that where application is made to the Board by an authority under s. 62 of this Act, to determine what is a reasonable cost within the meaning of that section, the Board may for that purpose fix, by order, Orders of the Local Government Board.

Note to

a general scale of charges for the whole or any part of the district of the authority, and the cost of the supply of water to any house within the area specified in the order shall be deemed to be determined to be a reasonable cost within the meaning of that section if it does not exceed the cost authorised by such general scale of charges. When application is made to the Board under s. 62 to determine the reasonable cost for the purposes of the section, and to fix a general scale of charges for the district, it should be borne in mind that the Board, under the section as amended by the Act of 1878, can only determine the reasonable cost at which a supply of water can be furnished compulsorily to houses which are without a proper supply. The Board state that, if there is no local Act in force authorising the levying of a water rate, and a supply is furnished by the district council pursuant to a requisition by a person entitled under s. 44 or s. 53 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, as incorporated by s. 57 of the present Act, the charges which the council may make for the supply are not controlled by the scale applicable to cases of enforced supply under s. 62, and they may, under s. 56, charge in respect of the supply a water rate to be assessed on the net annual value of the premises supplied, or they may enter into an agreement with the consumer for the supply on terms which may include the payment of a water rent.

No scale of charges approved by the Board is required to enable a district council to compel the laying on of a supply to a house where the charge for the supply is not to exceed twopence a week. The Board have stated that it is competent to a district council at any time to reduce the charges in cases to which an order applies. It is contrary to the Board's practice to approve a scale which contemplates the allowance of a discount for prompt payment.

(h) See definition in s. 4, ante, p. 8. The notice must proceed from the authority, not from the surveyor or other officer. See St. Leonard's, Shoreditch (Vestry of) v. Holmes, ante, p. 83.

(i) This was new in 1875. See s. 174, post, p. 396, as to the making of contracts.

Making and levying of rates.

(k) As to how water rates may be made and levied, see 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, ss. 68—74, and 26 & 27 Vict. c. 93, s. 21, incorporated herewith by s. 57, ante, p. 129, and set out in App. I.

An authority caused a water main to be laid along a street, and gave notice to the owner of a house in such street, under this section, to obtain a proper supply, and do all such works as might be necessary for that purpose. The notice was not complied with, and the authority did not exercise the power given to them by the section of executing the works necessary to connect the house with the main. In an action by the water company for water rates, it was held that the defendant was liable, and that it was not a condition precedent to such liability that the works necessary to bring the water into the house should have been executed (Southend Waterworks Co. v. Howard (1884), 13 Q. B. D. 215; 48 J. P. 469).

(l) See s. 251, post, p. 550. For a definition of owner, see s. 4, ante, p. 8. It will be seen that though the occupier may be required to pay for the supply of the water, the owner is to pay the cost of the works. As to the cases in which an owner may be compelled to pay the water rates, see 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, s. 72, in App. I. No preliminary determination of the authority as to the necessity for the works need be proved in any proceeding to recover the expenses (Caballero v. Lewis (1874), 38 J. P. 614).

(m) See, as to these expenses, s. 213, post, p. 492. An appeal against the order lies to the L. G. B. See s. 268, post, p. 592.

Powers of
water company for supplying water to local
authority.

63. Any water company may contract to supply water or may lease their waterworks to any local authority; and the directors of any water company, in pursuance, in the case of a company registered under the Companies Act, 1862 (a), of a special resolution of the members passed in manner provided by that Act (b), and in the case of any other company of a resolution passed by three-fourths (c) in number and value of the members present, either personally or by proxy, at a meeting specially convened with notice of the business to be transacted, may sell and transfer to any local authority, on such terms as may be agreed on between the company and the local authority, all the rights powers and privileges, and all or any of the waterworks premises and other property of the company, but subject to all liabilities to which the same are subject at the time of such purchase. Section 63.

(a) Now the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908. A similar provision with regard to gas and market companies will be found in ss. 162 and 168, post, pp. 365, 387. For the power of a council to purchase waterworks, and for decisions upon the construction of "purchase clauses" in deeds and statutes, see s. 51, ante, p. 119, and the notes thereto.

(b) See 8 Edw. 7, c. 69, ss. 69, 70.

(c) The L. G. A., 1858, s. 63, required a resolution of three-fifths. The directors may contract or lease of themselves; but can only sell with consent of the shareholders.

64. All existing public cisterns pumps wells (a) reservoirs (b) conduits aqueducts and works used for the gratuitous supply of water to the inhabitants of the district of any local authority shall (c) vest in and be under the control of such authority, and such authority may (d) cause the same to be maintained and plentifully supplied (e) with pure and wholesome water (f), or may substitute (g) maintain and plentifully supply with pure and wholesome water (f) other such works equally convenient; they may also (subject to the provisions of this Act) (h) construct any other such works for supplying water for the gratuitous use of any inhabitants who choose to carry the same away, not for sale, but for their own private use (i). Vesting of public cisterns, etc. in local authority.

(a) A well on private ground, the water of which had been used for domestic purposes gratuitously by the inhabitants in the vicinity for the prescriptive period, wells. was held to be a public well within the meaning of the corresponding provisions of the Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1867, s. 89 (4), and it was also held that the local authority might enter upon the land and do all acts to the well for continuing and maintaining it, which the inhabitants might have done before, even though there might be a company with a vested right to supply the inhabitants with water (Smith v. Archibald (1880), 5 App. Cas. 489). The facts in that case were as follows: Situated in one corner of a field in the parish of D. was a well. From the well to the entrance of the field there was a footpath, and from that entrance to the public road going through the village of D. there was a cart road. The inhabitants of D. had for the prescriptive period used the water of the well for domestic purposes, and had, among other acts done to the well, cradled it with stones at their own expense. The local authority, acting under the section already mentioned, caused the well to be covered in with an iron plate, and placed therein a hand pump with the avowed object of keeping the well free from pollution. The proprietor of the field, alleging the well to be his private property, instituted proceedings to compel the authority to remove the cover and pump. It was held by the House of Lords that the well was a public well within the meaning of the statute, and that the authority, as representing the inhabitants, had not done anything in excess of their powers. This decision was followed and applied in very similar circumstances in Dungarran Guardians v. Mansfield, [1897] 1 I. R. 420. In Holmfirth L. B. v. Shore (1895), 59 J. P. 344, a stone trough receiving water "Reservoir." from a spring at some distance from it, was held to be either a "well" or a "reservoir." WRIGHT, J., pointed out that the Scotch Act does not vest the wells, etc. in the local authority, so that the powers of an authority are wider under the English Act. See also Att.-Gen. v. Tonkin (1901), 18 T. L. R. 29. As to customary and prescriptive rights to draw water from a spring, see Harrop v.

Note to Section 64. Hirst (1869), L. R. 4 Ex. 43; 33 J. P. 103, and Dungarvan Guardians v. Mansfield, supra.

(b) In Leadgate L. B. v. Bland (1881), 45 J. P. 526, KAY, J., held that a natural pond was a "reservoir" within the section, having been used by the public for a number of years for the purpose of watering horses.

"Vesting."

(c) By the previous Public Health Acts, such cisterns, etc., had been vested in the respective local authorities, so that this section only continues the vesting already established. As to the meaning of the phrase vest in, see s. 13, note (h), ante, p. 48, and the notes to s. 149, post, p. 273. The effect of it is to enable the authority to bring an action in their own name (and not in the name only of the Attorney-General) for damages for any interference with the well itself, although such interference is not proved to be injurious to the public rights. But an action for damages for interfering with public access, or for an injunction to restrain interference with access, must be brought in the name of the Attorney-General (Holmfirth L. B. v. Shore, supra).

A parish council has no power to bring an action on behalf of the inhabitants of the parish, even for the purpose of restraining interference with their access to a pump properly erected by the council, under the powers given by s. 8 (1) of the L. G. A., 1894 (Stoke Parish Council v. Price, [1899] 2 Ch. 277; 63 J. P. 502).

Where an abandoned shaft of a disused mine within the meaning of the Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872, has become a public well, and as such vested in a local authority under this section, the authority are not the "owners" of the shaft within the meaning of s. 41 of the first-named Act, so as to render them liable under s. 13 to fence it (Knuckey v. Redruth R. D. C., [1904] 1 K. B. 382; 68 J. P. 172).

Duty and powers of authority.

(d) Query, how far the word casts a duty on the authority. They may maintain public wells, etc., although there is a company which supplies the district with water. "What the Act says is, notwithstanding that there might be a company with a vested right to supply the inhabitants, the local authority may, where there is a public well, and where there is a public right to be gratuitously supplied (from it), continue and maintain that well" (per Lord BLACKBURN, in Smith v. Archibald, supra, upon the somewhat similar Scotch Act).

(e) In Edwards v. Joliffe, W. N. (1877) 120, an injunction was granted at the suit of the plaintiff, through whose estate a lane passed, to restrain the defendant, a servant of the surveyor of highways, from digging holes in the roadway of the lane under these circumstances. On a piece of land not actually part of the lane, but entirely open to it, were five public wells which suddenly failed. The highway board, with the sanction of the rural sanitary authority, in whom the wells were vested under this section, ordered the defendant to dig the holes either to recover the water or to discover the cause of its having ceased to flow. The plaintiff's land on either side of the lane was on a slope, and on the southern side, where the land was below the level of the wells, the plaintiff had been drifting for water, and the defendant said he had no doubt the supply of water to the wells had been tapped by the plaintiff's operations:—Held, that the section did not authorise the authority to enter another man's land and help themselves to water. There was no suggestion that the plaintiff had done anything more than he was entitled to do, or that the defendant was not entering his land.

(f) If the well, etc., does not contain pure and wholesome water, and the local authority does not care to maintain it, they may close it under s. 70, post, p. 145.

(g) This would appear to refer to a substitution of the new works in the same place as the old. If so, this right would appear to be independent of the restriction imposed upon the local authority by s. 52, ante, p. 123, as to the construction of waterworks.

Notice to water company.

(h) This appears to refer to s. 52. If there is a water company supplying the district, the local authority would seem to require their consent to the gratuitous provision of water to the inhabitants.

"Gratuitous" supply.

(i) A local Act empowered the local board to supply the town with water at certain rates for domestic purposes, and for other than domestic purposes for such remuneration and upon such terms and conditions as should be agreed upon between them and the persons desirous of having such supply. An inhabitant having presented to the town an ornamental fountain with a trough or basin, which was set up in one of the public streets, the board supplied it with water on market days for the use of cattle in the market, and for horses, if yoked, when passing to and fro. The respondent, who kept horses, with a view to evade payment of the rate for the supply of water to his stable, took his horses to the fountain to drink. Upon an information against him under the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 59, post, p. 1419, the magistrates being of opinion that the board had no right to erect a fountain on the public highway otherwise than for the gratuitous use of the public under the corresponding section of the P. H. A., 1848, declined to convict. On appeal, it was held that they were wrong, for notwithstanding the fountain might be a public nuisance, yet the water was the private property of the board, and the respondent had no right to take it against their will (Hildreth v. Adamson (1860), 8 C. B. (N.S.) 587; 25 J. P. 645). The effect of this case is that an authority may, if they think fit, limit the purposes for which the gratuitous supply is provided. The court refrained from expressing any opinion as to whether a fountain for gratuitous supply might by virtue of this section be erected on a public highway. And it may be observed that while the P. H. A., 1890, s. 42, enables an urban authority to authorise the erection of a statue or monument in a street, it does not mention a fountain.

Note to
Section 64.

The corporation of H., in exercise of their powers as a local authority, erected a drinking trough in the main street, in front of the plaintiff's premises:—Held, that, although some annoyance was caused to the plaintiffs by the placing of the trough in front of their premises, there was no sufficient evidence of the existence of a legal nuisance to justify the interference of the court (Baker v. Hertford Corporation) (1900) Ch. D. (BUCKLEY, J.), May 17th, 1900).

In M'Loughlin v. Warrington Corporation (1911), 75 J. P. 57, a plaintiff recovered damages against a local authority in respect of injuries caused by a stone falling upon him from a drinking fountain belonging to the defendants and erected in a highway. The stone was dislodged by a person climbing the fountain to view a procession, but the fountain was alleged to be in a defective condition.

As to the erection of stand-pipes by a rural authority or by an urban authority under an order of the L. G. B., and as to the rating of persons using water from such stand-pipes, see the Public Health (Water) Act, 1878, ss. 9—11, post, p. 706.

A local authority, in whom a public well is vested by this section, has no power to grant a licence to abstract water from the well for the purpose of bottling and selling, so as to sensibly diminish the supply of water to riparian proprietors along a stream fed by the well (Mostyn v. Atherton, [1899] 2 Ch. 360).

65. Any local authority may, if they think fit, supply water from any waterworks purchased or constructed by them to any public baths or wash-houses (a), or for trading or manufacturing purposes, on such terms and conditions as may be agreed on between the local authority and the persons desirous of being so supplied (b); moreover, any local authority may, if they think fit, construct any works for the gratuitous supply of any public baths or wash-houses established otherwise than for private profit or supported out of any poor or borough rates (c).

Water for public baths, or trading or manufacturing purposes.

(a) See the Baths and Wash-houses Acts, as defined by s. 4, ante, p. 35.

(b) It is optional with the local authority whether they will supply water for these purposes or not. They are obliged to supply water for domestic purposes if they undertake the supply of water to the district. See s. 55, ante, p. 126, and see the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 53, in App. I., post, p. 1417.

The agreement should be in writing, and under the seal of the parties.

(c) It is not quite clear what is referred to by these latter words, as public baths and washhouses are supported out of public funds.

Section 66.

Duty of urban authority to provide fire-plugs.

66. Every urban authority (a) shall (b) cause fire-plugs and all necessary works machinery and assistance for securing an efficient supply of water in case of fire to be provided and maintained, and for this purpose they may enter into any agreement with any water company or person ; and they shall (c) paint or mark on the buildings and walls within the streets words or marks near to such fire-plugs to denote the situation thereof, and do such other things for the purposes aforesaid as they may deem expedient.

authorities.

(a) It will be observed that only urban authorities are placed under this obligation, and as there is no other distinct enabling section, rural district councils are given no express powers under the Act for the provision of fire-plugs, hydrants and other appliances for furnishing water for fire brigade purposes. Where, however, a rural council provide a public water supply for a parish in their district they may be presumed to have power to fix fire hydrants in the mains as part of the works of water supply which they may carry out under s. 51. In other cases, if power to provide hydrants is required, they should apply to the L. G. B. for an order under s. 276. In view of the imperative character of s. 66, it is the Board's practice to restrict such orders to the particular parish or parishes in which the appliances are shown to be required, and in which the council are prepared to take action at once. In the opinion of the L. G. B. a parish council has no power to provide hydrants.

authority.

(b) Note that these words are imperative, and require the urban authority to make this provision. See Grand Junction Waterworks Co. v. Brentford L. B., infra, per LINDLEY, L.J., [1894] 2 Q. B. 735, at p. 738. The clause is introduced from the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, s. 124. Nothing, however, in the present section or in the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, ss. 38—41, imposes on an urban authority any obligation to bear the expense of maintaining in repair the fire-plugs in their district, unless such fire-plugs have been fixed by them or by some water company or other person at their request (Grand Junction Waterworks Co. v. Brentford L. B., [1894] 2 Q. B. 735 ; 59 J. P. 51).

A private water Act provided that the company should, at the request of an owner or occupier of any premises situate in or adjoining any street in which any main or service pipe of the company was or should be laid, and who required a supply of water, afford a supply of water. The plaintiff declared upon the section so providing, and stated that he was such an owner and occupier, and that he requested and required a supply of water, but that the company made default in affording to him the said supply, by reason whereof he was unable to extinguish a fire which destroyed his premises. The defendants pleaded that the main or service pipe had a certain fire-plug properly fixed in it, and that the said fire-plug was opened for the purpose of extinguishing another fire, which was the cause of the default. They also pleaded that they were prevented from affording the said supply of water from unavoidable cause or accident :—Held, on demurrer, that the former plea was good, but the latter bad (Campbell v. East London Waterworks Co. (1872), 36 J. P. 711 ; 26 L. T. 475).

Provisions of the Waterworks
Clauses Act,
1847.

By the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, the undertakers are : (1) to fix and maintain fire-plugs ; (2) to furnish to the town commissioners a sufficient supply of water for certain public purposes ; (3) to keep their pipes to which the fire-plugs are fixed at all times charged with water at a certain pressure, and to allow all persons at all times to use the same for extinguishing fire without compensation ; and (4) to supply to every owner or occupier of any dwelling-house, having paid or tendered the water rate, sufficient water for domestic purposes. Penalties are imposed by the Act for neglect of each of the above duties. The plaintiff brought an action for damages against a waterworks company for not keeping their pipes charged as required by the Act, whereby his premises were burnt down :—Held, reversing the Court of Exchequer, that the statute gave no right of action to the plaintiff (Atkinson v. Newcastle and Gateshead Waterworks Co. (1877), 2 Ex. D. 441 ; 42 J. P. 183). But the decision in this case was held not to apply in an action for injuries sustained by the bursting of a fire-plug in a highway, the penalty being for failing to keep the pipes charged in case of fire (Hancock v. Southwark and Vauxhall Waterworks Co., W. N. (1889) 198). On the other hand it was held to apply to an action for failing to supply water to an occupier (McColla v. Clacton-on-Sea Gas and Water Co. (1889), 5 T. L. R. 690). An urban authority requested a water company which supplied their district, and whose provisional order incorporated the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, to fix a fire-plug at a spot in a street where it was essential that a fire-plug should be placed, but where the existing pipe of the company was of insufficient capacity to carry a proper fire-plug. The company were willing to place a proper fire-plug at the point, provided the authority would pay the expense of laying a new length of three-inch main instead of the existing one-inch pipe. An information having been laid against the company, charging them with neglecting to fix the fire-plug, the company were convicted and fined. But it was held on a case stated that the duties of the company as to the supply of water were regulated by s. 35 of the Act of 1847, which provides for a constant supply for domestic use, and that s. 38 imposed no duty on the company to provide pipes of such capacity that fire-plugs could be affixed to them suitable for the supply of water for extinguishing fires and that the conviction must therefore be quashed (Wells Water Co. v. Wells Town Council (1886), 51 J. P. 135; 55 L. T. 188). The water which may be taken by all persons at all times for extinguishing fire without compensation, under s. 42 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, is the water from undertakers' pipes to which fire-plugs are fixed (Weardale and Consett Waterworks Co. v. Chester-le-Street Co-operative Society, Ltd., [1904] 2 K. B. 240; 68 J. P. 386). See also judgments of his Honour Judge BRADBURY, noticed in 70 J. P. N. 472, and of his Honour Judge WOODFALL, in Journal of Gas Lighting, 1907, p. 988.

Note to
Section 66.

A water company which has provided hydrants pursuant to the Metropolitan Fire Brigade Act, 1865, s. 32, and the Metropolis Water Act, 1871, s. 34, or either of these sections, may, in the absence of any agreement under the London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1894, s. 4, and without the consent of the County Council, lawfully use such hydrants for purposes other than the supply of water for extinguishing fires and the purposes specified in the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 37, and such user may, with the permission of the company, be exercised by other persons also (London C. C. v. East London Waterworks Co., [1900] 1 Q. B. 330).

A water company, having observed all statutory directions in laying down their pipes, are not responsible for an escape of water from them not caused by their own negligence. The fact that their precautions prove insufficient in a winter of extreme coldness, such as could not have been foreseen, is not sufficient to render them liable for negligence. Fire-plugs properly constructed having been inserted in these pipes in pursuance of the Act, semble, per BRAMWELL, B., that the company are not liable for an accident caused by the accumulation of ice in a street over a plug (Blyth v. Birmingham Waterworks Co. (1856), 11 Ex. 781; 20 J. P. 247).

Liability for
to fire-plugs.

Although a water company is not liable for the unforeseen results of an extraordinary frost, yet they are bound to take reasonable care to provide against the consequences of ordinary frosts. Where it appeared that it was known that the effect of frost would be to cause plugs in the water pipes to start, and thus to let the water out at the side, and that some precautions might have been taken, if not to prevent this, at all events to prevent the water from escaping through the soil, and, no such precautions having been taken, the plugs started in a frost of extraordinary severity, and the water thus escaping, ran through the soil into the plaintiff's cellar:—Held, that there was some evidence of negligence on which a jury might hold the company liable (Steggles v. New River Co. (1863), 11 W. R. 234; affirmed, 13 W. R. 413).

By a local Act a waterworks company was bound at the request of the Town Improvement Commissioners to fix fire-plugs in their mains, and to repair and keep them in order at the cost of the commissioners, in whom the property in the plugs was vested by their Improvement Act. In consequence of the cap of one of the plugs provided under the Act being broken, a horse placed his foot in the plug-hole and was lamed:—Held, that the waterworks company and not the commissioners were liable for the injury (Bayley v. Wolverhampton Waterworks Co. (1860), 25 J. P. 199 ; 6 H. & N. 241).

It will be found stated in the notes to s. 144, post, p. 252, that though a local authority are not liable for accidents caused by the mere non-repair of highways, they may be responsible not as surveyors of highways, but in another capacity as the owners of drains, water-pipes, fire-plugs, etc., in the highway. Thus, in Blackmore v. Mile End Old Town (Vestry of) (1882), 9 Q. B. D. 451 ; 47 J. P. 52, an authority were held liable for an accident caused by an iron flap placed in the highway over a water meter, the flap having worn smooth and become slippery and dangerous. But where the same body are both the highway authority and the water or sewer authority they cannot be held responsible for accidents caused by the wearing away of the road allowing the edge of a manhole cover or a sewer grating or a water valve cover to project dangerously above the surface of the road, the cover or grating not being in itself out of repair or improperly constructed (Thompson v. Mayor, etc. of Brighton ; Oliver v. Horsham L. B., [1894] 1 Q. B. 332 ; 58 J. P. 297 ; overruling Kent v. Worthing L. B. (1882), 10 Q. B. D. 118 ; 47 J. P. 23. See also Winslow v. Bushey U. D. C. (1908), 72 J. P. 259). It had previously been held that a water company authorised by statute (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, s. 38) to place fire-plugs in a highway, and required to keep the plugs in repair, but having no power to repair the highway, is not bound to vary the level of such plugs from time to time if and as the surface of the road wears away. If the fire-plug is properly placed in the first instance, and is kept in repair, the company will not be liable for a personal injury to one of the public by reason of the projection of the plug above the level of the highway (Moore v. Lambeth Waterworks Co. (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 462 ; 50 J. P. 756). Compare, however, with these cases Papworth v. Battersea Borough Council, [1914] 2 K. B. 89.

The plaintiff, leaning on his stick, as he walked down a street, put it into a hole, in which was a stop-cock, fell, and broke his leg. A new trial was asked for on the ground that there was no evidence that the defendant company were responsible for having put or kept the unsafe box in which the stop-cock was fixed. The defect in the fitting of the stop-cock was that it was contained in an old-fashioned "box," with a deep open hole to admit the key for turning the water off and on, instead of a closed box of the pattern now used. There was evidence that an officer of the company had been seen superintending the putting down the stop-cock. The box was impressed with the name of the company. It had been supplied by them, and they had a regulation made under statutory authority, requiring such work to be done for occupiers and owners by themselves:—Held, that there was evidence of negligence on the part of the defendants for which they were liable (Strube v. Southwark and Vauxhall Water Co. (1888), 5 T. L. R. 638 ; affirming 53 J. P. 424 ; 5 T. L. R. 451. See also Stockings v. Lambeth Waterworks Co. (1891), 7 T. L. R. 460 ; Osborn v. Metropolitan Water Board (1910), 74 J. P. 190 ; 102 L. T. 217 ; Rosenbaum v. Metropolitan Water Board (1910), 75 J. P. 12 ; 103 L. T. 739 ; and cf. Chapman v. Fylde Waterworks Co., in the notes to s. 28 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, in App. I., post, p. 1412, and Colne Valley Water Co. v. Hall (1907), 72 J. P. 25 ; 98 L. T. 398).

With reference to the foregoing decisions it must be noticed that within the area supplied by the Metropolitan Water Board communication pipes from a main to houses, and stop-cock boxes connected therewith, are now by virtue of the Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907, ss. 8, 19, repairable (whenever laid or constructed) by the owners or occupiers of the houses. Therefore, an owner or occupier, and not the Board, is liable to a passenger for injuries due to a defective box (Batt v. Metropolitan Water Board, [1911] 2 K. B. 965 ; 75 J. P. 545).

See Plantza v. Glasgow Corporation, [1910] S. C. 786, for a case of injury due to collision with a turnkey standing in a stop-cock.

Fire-engines and brigades.

As to the powers of an urban authority to provide fire-engines, see s. 171 (2), the Parish Fire-engines Act, 1898, and the P. H. A., 1907, s. 90.

Rural authorities may obtain powers in this behalf by means of an urban powers order under s. 276, and independently of such powers, action may be taken parochially in rural parishes, by the parish council, lighting inspectors, or overseers, as the case may be, under one or other of the following enactments: the Lighting and Watching Act, 1833 (s. 44), the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1867 (s. 29), the L. G. A., 1894 (s. 6 (1) (c) (ii)), the Parish Fire-engines Act, 1898, and the P. H. A., 1907 (s. 90).

Note to
Section 66.

(c) The defendant authority had placed a fire-plug in a road not repairable by them, and had put up a plate of the usual kind, "F. P. 22 ft."; the plate was some feet out of position with regard to the plug; but, although it did not indicate the correct line to the plug, a searcher following the line indicated would ordinarily have seen the plug. At the material time the plug was buried by a layer of earth or ashes, but this had not been done by or with the knowledge of the defendants. A fire broke out on the plaintiffs' premises, and, as the jury found, increased damage was done because the fire-brigade could not for some time find the plug in question. The jury found that the defendants were guilty of negligence in erecting a misleading plate:—Held, that the defendants were liable in damages as for an act of misfeasance (Dawson v. Bingley U. D. C., [1911] 2 K. B. 149; 75 J. P. 289). Failure to indicate position of plug.

This section will be a sufficient justification, though the owner or occupier of the buildings or walls should object to the mark.

67. In the Oxford or Cambridge district (a) the local authority may supply water to any hall college or premises of the university within such district, on such terms with respect to the mode of paying for such supply as may from time to time be agreed on between such university, or any hall or college thereof, and the local authority. Agreements with universities.

(a) This section renders the demand of water rates from the occupiers of individual chambers unnecessary, but the agreement must be duly executed under seal by the local authority and the corporate body of the university, college, or hall. See s. 342, post, p. 663, as to Oxford.

Provisions for Protection of Water.

- 68. Any person (a) engaged in the manufacture of gas who (b):
- (1) Causes or suffers to be brought or to flow into any stream reservoir aqueduct pond or place for water, or into any drain or pipe communicating therewith, any washing or other substance produced in making or supplying gas; or
 - (2) Wilfully does any act connected with the making or supplying of gas whereby the water in any such stream reservoir aqueduct pond or place for water is fouled, shall forfeit for every such offence the sum of two hundred pounds, and, after the expiration of twenty-four hours notice (c) from the local authority or the person to whom the water belongs in that behalf, a further sum of twenty pounds for every day during which the offence is continued (d) or during the continuance of the act whereby the water is fouled.

Every such penalty may be recovered, with full costs of suit, in any of the superior courts, in the case of water belonging to or under the control of the local authority by the local authority, and in any other case by the person into whose water such washing or other substance is conveyed or flows or whose water is fouled by any such act as aforesaid, or in default of proceedings by such person, after notice to him from the local authority of their intention to proceed for such penalty, by the local authority (e); but such penalty shall not be recoverable unless it

Section 68. be sued for during the continuance of the offence, or within six months after it has ceased (f).

(a) This word, according to the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 6, includes any body of persons corporate or unincorporate.

Duty of gas manufacturer an absolute duty.

(b) A private Act incorporating a gas company, and empowering them to make the necessary works, provided (s. 160), that if the company should at any time "cause or suffer to be conveyed or to flow" into any stream, etc., or place for water within the limits of the Act, any washing produced in making gas, or do any act to the water contained in any such stream, etc., or place for water, whereby the water therein should be fouled or corrupted, the company should forfeit for every such offence £200. Section 161 imposed an additional penalty of £20 per day for the continuance of such pollution more than twenty-four hours after notice. Section 165 made the company liable to a penalty if any water was polluted by the escape of gas. The site for the gas tank was selected by an experienced engineer, and the company built it in a proper manner, and with all ordinary care and prudence. They knew that mines had been worked in the neighbourhood, but did not know that any mines had been worked under their own lands. After some years the gas tank cracked, and the washings produced in the making of gas escaped and percolating underground polluted the water in the plaintiff's well. The company then found on inquiry that mines had been worked by strangers under part of their land close up to the tank. The crack in the tank was caused by subsidence of the soil, owing, in all probability, to the mining operations :—Held, by the Exchequer Chamber, that the company were liable under s. 160 to the penalty of £200 for polluting the plaintiff's water by the gas washings (Hipkins v. Birmingham and Staffordshire Gas Co. (1861), 24 J. P. 438 ; 6 H. & N. 250).

When noxious matter percolated through the soil from gasworks so as to foul a well, such percolation was held to render a company liable under the similar provisions of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 90. A well which, on account of its having become contaminated, had been disused by the owners for several years, and had been covered over, was held to be still a well within the meaning of the Act. Non-user, and the closing of his own well in consequence of its being polluted, even coupled with acceptance by the plaintiff of the use of wells substituted by the defendants, was held not to be such an abandonment of the former as to alter its character and make it no longer a well, nor could any licence to pollute it be inferred from such a state of facts. Quere, per KEATING, J., whether a man could by deed give an irrevocable licence to pollute a well. A prescription to foul a well will be defeated by variation and excess in the degree of fouling during the prescribed period (Millington v. Griffiths and Others (1874), 30 L. T. 65). In the above case it is assumed that a well is a "place for water."

Apart from statutory provision it appears that pollution of a river by gas washings is a nuisance at common law for which an indictment will lie. See R. v. Medley and Others (1834), 6 C. & P. 292.

Similar statutory provisions.

It is to be observed that the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 21, contains provisions similar to this section. Where, therefore, that Act is incorporated with a local Act, or where a local Act containing similar provisions is in force, proceedings may be taken either under this or the local Act by virtue of s. 340, post, p. 662.

The Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 62, which is incorporated in this Act by s. 57, ante, p. 129, and is printed in App. I., post, p. 1405, contains provisions almost identical with this section, which is taken from 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, ss. 23, 24, and extends the provisions of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, s. 80.

The W. Gas Company unexpectedly discharged a quantity of offensive liquid from their works into the sewers of the W. Corporation. The liquid passed through the sewage works on to the sewage farm and thence into a tributary of the Thames. The W. Corporation were convicted of unlawfully and wilfully suffering a large quantity of washing or other substance produced in the making of gas to flow or pass into a tributary of the Thames contrary to s. 92 of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894. On an appeal it was held that it was not proved the appellants had "wilfully" suffered the deleterious matter to pass into the Thames, and the conviction was quashed (High Wycombe Corporation v. Thames Conservators (1898), 78 L. T. 463; 14 T. L. R. 358). Proceedings had already been taken by the conservators under the same Act against the W. Gas Company in respect of this occurrence. The company pleaded guilty and were fined.

Note to Section 68.

(c) As to notices and their service, see ss. 266, 267, post, p. 590.

(d) Apparently this means after notice has been given to the offender, so that if no notice be given a penalty of £200 is recoverable; if notice be given, that sum and the additional sum from the time of the notice is recoverable. Daily penalties.

(e) The same provisions in the Nuisances Removal Act, 1855, ss. 23—25, were held to supersede a clause in a local Act containing similar penalties (Parry v. Croydon Gas and Coke Co. (1864), 28 J. P. 86; 15 C. B. (N.S.) 568; but see s. 340, post, p. 662. See also note (b), supra).

(f) 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, s. 80, contained provisions for examining the gas pipes which are omitted here, and it is very doubtful whether s. 305, post, p. 635, will apply to this case.

69. Any local authority, with the sanction of the Attorney-General, may, either in their own name or in the name of any other person, with the consent of such person, take such proceedings by indictment bill in Chancery action or otherwise as they may deem advisable for the purpose of protecting any watercourse (a) within their jurisdiction from pollutions arising from sewage (b) either within or without their district; and the costs of and incidental to any such proceedings, including any costs that may be awarded to the defendant, shall be deemed to be expenses properly incurred by such authority in the execution of this Act. Local authority may take proceedings to prevent pollution of streams.

(a) Note that this is not applicable to all rivers and streams, but only to such streams as constitute "watercourses"; and it is presumed that they are not such as belong to the authority, seeing that the ordinary laws regarding property would enable an authority to take such proceedings in reference to their own property. To constitute a "watercourse" there must be water flowing in a channel between banks more or less defined (per TENTERDEN, L.C.J., in R. v. Inhabitants of Oxfordshire (1830), 1 B. & Ad., p. 301). It may be natural or artificial. See Bowes v. Watson (1879), 44 J. P. 364; 42 L. T. 27; Smith v. Barnham (1876), 1 Ex. D. 419; 40 J. P. 710; Biscoe v. Drought (1859), 11 Ir. C. L. R. 250; Sutcliffe v. Booth (1863), 32 L. J. Q. B. 186; 27 J. P. 613; Remfry v. Surveyor-General of Natal, [1896] A. C. 558. The line of a periodical "bourne flow" was held not to be a watercourse in Pearce v. Croydon R. D. C., cited in note to s. 17 on p. 59, ante. See, also, as to a similar "flow," Att.-Gen. v. Lewes Corporation, cited on p. 27, ante. As to when a stream or watercourse may become a "sewer" see the last-mentioned case and other decisions in notes to s. 4, p. 27, ante.

(b) Pollution from manufacturing or other similar processes is not provided for by this section. See, however, the Rivers Pollution Prevention Acts, 1876 and 1893, in App. I., post, as to pollution by solid matters, sewage and manufacturing and mining pollutions, and the duties cast upon local authorities by those Acts.

As to the power of a county council to take proceedings to restrain the pollution of a stream, see the L. G. A., 1888, s. 14, post, p. 749.

70. On the representation of any person to any local authority that within their district the water in any well tank or cistern, public or private, or supplied from any public pump, and used or likely to be used by man for drinking or domestic purposes, or for manufacturing drinks Power to close polluted wells, etc.

Section 70. for the use of man (a), is so polluted (b) as to be injurious to health, such authority may apply to a court of summary jurisdiction (c) for an order to remedy the same; and thereupon such court shall summon the owner or occupier (d) of the premises to which the well tank or cistern belongs, if it be private, and in the case of a public well tank cistern or pump, any person alleged in the application to be interested in the same (e), and may either dismiss the application, or may make an order directing the well tank cistern or pump to be permanently or temporarily closed, or the water to be used for certain purposes only, or such other order as may appear to them to be requisite to prevent injury to the health of persons drinking the water (f).

The court may, if they see fit, cause the water complained of to be analysed at the cost of the local authority applying to them under this section (g).

If the person on whom an order under this section is made fails to comply with the same, the court may on the application of the local authority authorise them to do whatever may be necessary in the execution of the order, and any expenses incurred by them may be recovered in a summary manner (h) from the person on whom the order is made.

Expenses incurred by any rural authority in the execution of this section, and not recovered by them as aforesaid, shall be special expenses (i).

Water for manufactured drinks. (a) These last words were new, and were inserted to include cases when the water is used for the manufacture of aerated or other drinks for human consumption.

(b) The well or tank must be alleged to be polluted, not merely likely to be polluted even if this is practically certain. The section would therefore not meet the case of the opening of a burial ground in close proximity to a well. In such circumstances, if the well cannot be closed, it must be closely watched.

(c) See the definition, ante, p. 36.

Persons to be summoned. (d) Apparently the court may select which party should be summoned, but the authority should lay their views before the court. As to the word owner, see the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 8.

(e) These words are general and indefinite. Presumably the proper person will be a parish officer or some officer of the authority, as for the most part the well or other place will be vested in the authority under s. 64, ante, p. 137. It has sometimes been considered that persons were interested in a well because they were in the habit of taking water from it. But it is submitted that the interest here referred to is one of ownership. At all events, an order could not be made on such persons under this section.

(f) Very wide powers are granted to the court by these words. It may be prudent to allow any person to be affected (though not named in the application) to show cause against the granting of the order. See Gill v. Bright (1871), 41 L. J. M. C. 22; 36 J. P. 198; R. v. Cheshire Lines Committee (1873), L. R. 8 Q. B. 344; 37 J. P. 373, and cases cited in note (e) to s. 158, post, p. 353.

Analysis of water. (g) 38 & 39 Vict. c. 63, and the amending Acts in App. I., post, which provide for the analysis of food and drugs, exclude the analysis of water. Hence any analysis of water must be made independently of those Acts. It is to be noticed also that the power of the court to order an analysis is limited to cases in which the local authority are the applicants for the order.

REGULATION OF CELLAR DWELLINGS AND LODGING-HOUSES.

Occupation of Cellar Dwellings (a).

71. It shall not be lawful to let (b) or occupy (c) or suffer to be occupied separately as a dwelling any cellar (including for the purposes of this Act in that expression any vault or underground room) built or rebuilt after the passing of this Act, or which is not lawfully so let or occupied at the time of the passing of this Act (d). Prohibition of occupying cellar dwellings.

(a) The Housing, Town Planning, etc. Act, 1909, s. 17 (7), post, p. 1167, prohibits in many cases the habitual use as a sleeping place of a room, the surface of the floor of which is more than three feet below street level.

(b) The infringement of this section is an offence: for the penalty, see s. 73, post, p. 148. In Gowen v. Sedgwick (1904), 68 J. P. 484, it was held that an owner of a new house, who had allowed it to be occupied by a caretaker rent free, could not be convicted of having "let" the house in contravention of a byelaw.

(c) As to what amounts to occupation "as a dwelling," see s. 74, post, p. 148.

(d) But for these words the repeal of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, s. 67, would operate so as to legalise the letting or occupation of cellars built since the passing of that Act. The effect is that no cellar built or rebuilt since 1848 can be lawfully occupied, unless it was let or occupied before that year, and not even in such a case unless the requirements of the next section are complied with.

72. It shall not be lawful (a) to let or occupy (b) or suffer to be occupied separately as a dwelling, any cellar whatsoever (c), unless the following requisitions are complied with; (that is to say,) Existing cellar dwellings only to be let or occupied on certain conditions.

Unless the cellar is in every part thereof at least seven feet in height, measured from the floor to the ceiling thereof, and is at least three feet of its height above the surface of the street or ground adjoining or nearest to the same; and

Unless there is outside of and adjoining the cellar and extending along the entire frontage thereof, and upwards from six inches below the level of the floor thereof up to the surface of the said street or ground, an open area of at least two feet and six inches wide in every part; and

Unless the cellar is effectually drained by means of a drain, the uppermost part of which is one foot at least below the level of the floor thereof; and

Unless there is appurtenant to the cellar the use of a water-closet earth-closet or privy and an ashpit, furnished with proper doors and coverings, according to the provisions of this Act (d); and

Unless the cellar has a fireplace with a proper chimney or flue, and an external window of at least nine superficial feet in area clear of the sash frame, and made to open in a manner approved by the surveyor (e) (except in the case of an inner or back cellar let or occupied along with a front cellar as part of the same letting or occupation, in which case the external window may be of any dimensions not being less than four superficial feet in area clear of the sash frame).

Provided that in any area adjoining a cellar there may be steps necessary for access to such cellar, if the same be so placed as not to be over across or opposite to the said external window, and so as to allow between every part of such steps and the external wall of such cellar a Section 72. clear space of six inches at the least, and that over or across any such area there may be steps necessary for access to any building above the cellar to which such area adjoins, if the same be so placed as not to be over across or opposite to any such external window.

(a) The penalty for infringement is imposed by the next section. See also note (a) to the preceding section.

(b) As to what amounts to occupation "as a dwelling," see s. 74, infra.

(c) This section deals with cellars which were let or occupied in 1848, because by the last section, which re-enacts 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, s. 67, no cellars can have begun to be lawfully occupied as dwellings subsequent to that Act.

(d) See s. 35, ante, p. 95.

(e) See the definition of surveyor in s. 4, ante, p. 7.

Penalty on persons offending against enactment.

73. Any person who lets occupies (a) or knowingly suffers to be occupied for hire or rent (b), any cellar contrary to the provisions of this Act shall be liable for every such offence to a penalty (c) not exceeding twenty shillings for every day during which the same continues to be so let or occupied after notice in writing (d) from the local authority in this behalf.

(a) See the next section.

(b) The words for hire or rent do not occur in the two previous sections, which simply make it unlawful to let, occupy, or suffer to be occupied as a dwelling any cellar, etc. There may, therefore, be a contravention of ss. 71 or 72, to which this section does not apply. If so, it would appear that the only remedy would be by indictment for disobedience of a statute, which is a misdemeanor at common law (Archbold's Criminal Pleading, 24th ed., pp. 3—5; and see R. v. Walker, ante, p. 107).

(c) As to the recovery of this penalty, see s. 251, post, p. 550.

(d) See as to the authentication and service of notices, ss. 266, 267, post, p. 590. Care must be taken to serve the notices on the several parties, the lessor and the occupier, according as the proceedings are taken. A form of notice will be found in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 312.

Definition of occupying as a dwelling.

74. Any cellar in which any person passes the night shall be deemed to be occupied as a dwelling within the meaning of this Act.

Power to close cellars in case of two convictions.

75. Where two convictions against the provisions of any Act (a) relating to the occupation of a cellar as a separate dwelling place have taken place within three months (whether the persons so convicted were or were not the same) a court of summary jurisdiction (b) may direct the closing of the premises so occupied for such time as it may deem necessary, or may empower the local authority permanently to close the same, and to defray any expenses incurred by them in the execution of this section (c).

(a) These words will, doubtless, apply to local Acts which contain provisions to prevent the occupation of cellars as well as to convictions under this Act.

(b) See the definition, ante, p. 36.

(c) There is no provision for enforcing the order, but the disobedience to it would probably be an indictable misdemeanor. See note (b) to s. 73, supra. See also the Housing, Town Planning, etc. Act, 1909, s. 17 (7), post, p. 1167.

*Common Lodging-houses (a).Section 76.

76. Every local authority shall (b) keep a register in which shall be entered the names and residences of the keepers (c) of all common lodging-houses within the district of such authority, and the situation of every such house, and the number of lodgers authorised under this Act by such authority to be received therein.

Registers of common lodging-houses to be kept.

A copy of any entry in such register, certified by the clerk of the local authority to be a true copy, shall be received in all courts and on all occasions as evidence, and shall be sufficient proof of the matter registered, without production of the register or of any document or thing on which the entry is founded; and a certified copy of any such entry shall be supplied gratis by the clerk to any person applying at a reasonable time for the same.

Forms for use under this and the following sections will be found in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., pp. 317—321.

(a) The Common Lodging-houses Acts, 1851 and 1853, were the statutes which regulated common lodging-houses, but they are repealed by this Act, except so far as relates to the Metropolitan Police District. (See Schedule V., post, p. 695.) Their provisions are, however, virtually re-enacted, and any definition or decisions relating to those provisions will doubtless be regarded when construing the Public Health Act. When the Acts of 1851 and 1853 were passed, there was no statutory definition of the term "common lodging-house," although in the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, which contains clauses as to the regulation of common lodging-houses, there was, in s. 116, this definition of a "public lodging-house": "Every house shall be deemed a public lodging-house within the meaning of this Act in which persons are harboured or lodged for hire for a single night, or for less than a week at one time, or any part of which is let for any term less than a week." The General Board of Health, therefore, in 1853, took the opinion of COCKBURN, L.C.J., and Lord HATHERLEY, the then law officers of the Crown, who advised thus: "It may be difficult to give a precise definition of the term 'common lodging-house'; but, looking to the preamble and general provisions of the Act (14 & 15 Vict. c. 28), it appears to us to have reference to that class of lodging-house in which persons of the poorer class are received for short periods, and, though strangers to one another, are allowed to inhabit one common room. We are of opinion that it does not include hotels, inns, publichouses, or lodgings let to the upper and middle classes." They afterwards explained the passage as to strangers thus: "Our obvious intention was to distinguish lodgers promiscuously brought together from members of one family or household." And they added that, in their opinion, "the period of letting is unimportant in determining whether a lodging-house comes under the Act now in question." In the memorandum prefixed to the model byelaws issued by the L. G. B. under s. 80, post, p. 153, it is stated that so far as the foregoing definition of a common lodging-house rests upon the basis of the habitation of a common room by lodgers who are strangers to one another in the sense of not being members of one family or household, it may be inferred that this characteristic equally distinguishes the common lodging-houses to which this Act applies; and that such an inference receives support from the terms of s. 87, post, p. 157.

An interpretation of the term "common lodging-house" is contained in s. 89, post, p. 158, but it is not exhaustive, and until the year 1905 it was generally believed that there was no statutory definition of the term "common lodging-house"; but in that year it was discovered that such a definition existed in s. 3 of the Common Lodging-houses Act (Ireland), 1860, which runs thus: "The 'Statutory term 'common lodging-house' shall mean a house in which persons are harboured or lodged for hire for a single night, or for less than a week at a time, or any part of which is let for any term less than a week." This Irish Act was subsequently repealed by the Irish Public Health Act, 1878, but the definition may still be looked at for the purpose of construing the English Common Lodging-houses Acts, 1851 and 1853. See Parker v. Talbot, infra. The existence of the definition clause was discovered by the Court of Appeal during the argument of Parker v. Talbot, [1905] 2 Ch. 643; 70 J. P. 43. In this case it was accordingly held that a lodging-house in which persons of the very poorest class are received without payment of any kind, direct or indirect, the inmates being treated and dealt with in a manner similar to that in which the habitual frequenters of common lodging-houses are treated, was not a common lodging-house within the Common Lodging-houses Acts, 1851 and 1853. An earlier decision of the Divisional Court to the contrary effect (Gilbert v. Jones, [1905] 2 K. B. 691; 69 J. P. 392) was overruled.

In Langdon v. Broadbent (1877), 42 J. P. 56; 37 L. T. 434, a lodging-house where hawkers and persons of a similar class were received, staying for various periods, having their meals in one room, and paying sixpence a night, was held to be a common lodging-house within this section (s. 76). GROVE, J., said: "Each case must be decided on its own facts. There may be lodging-houses resorted to by a higher class of persons to which the term 'common lodging-house' would not be applicable. The case does not find whether the lodgers occupied separate sleeping apartments. But I do not think it is necessary to show that the lodgers are all herded together in order to bring the case within the statute. Even if a common room is necessary to constitute a common lodging-house, the evidence here shows that they all took their meals together." And see Halligan v. Ganly; Logsdon v. Trotter, infra. It has now been definitely decided (under the London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1902) that a house in which there is no community of eating or sleeping accommodation is not a common lodging-house, but rather a "house let in lodgings" (London C. C. v. Hankins, [1914] 1 K. B. 490; 78 J. P. 107).

B. opened a lodging-house for the reception of male lodgers, who slept in one common room capable of accommodating 100 persons. The lodgers were charged, at the discretion of the manager, a sum not exceeding fourpence per night for bed, supper, and breakfast; the house was, however, maintained, not for the purpose of gain, but for the accommodation of the poorest class of persons only, partly with a charitable and partly with a religious object. The house had not been inspected or approved by the officer of the local authority, nor was it registered. B. having been convicted for keeping a common lodging-house in contravention of 16 & 17 Vict. c. 41, s. 3, it was held that the house, being maintained as a charitable institution and not for purposes of gain, was not a common lodging-house within the meaning of the Act, and that the conviction could not be supported (Booth v. Ferrett (1890), 25 Q. B. D. 87; 55 J. P. 7). But this decision must now be regarded as overruled. A common lodging-house is that class of lodging-house in which persons of the poorer class are received for short periods and, although strangers to one another, are allowed to inhabit one common room, and the fact that such a house is not carried on as a business for the sake of profit, but as a humane or charitable enterprise, does not take it out of the measure of sanitary protection provided by the Acts, or prevent it being a common lodging-house within their meaning. The question is not with what object, or from what motive, the house is carried on, but whether the house is such, and is so carried on, as to be within the provisions of the Acts (Logsdon v. Booth, [1900] 1 Q. B. 401; 64 J. P. 165). This decision remains unaffected by the decision in Parker v. Talbot, supra, as was pointed out by COZENS-HARDY, L.J., at [1905] 2 Ch., p. 653.

The fact that separate sleeping accommodation in cubicles, the other rooms being used in common, is afforded to lodgers, at charges above the ordinary rate paid in common lodging-houses, at an institution promoted by benevolent persons for the benefit of a class of poor persons superior to the "dosser" class, does not render such institution any the less a "common lodging-house" or exempt it from registration and inspection (Logsdon v. Trotter, [1900] 1 Q. B. 617; 64 J. P. 421).

The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 214, provides that the sanitary authority of any seaport town may make byelaws relating to seamen's lodging-houses. See the section set out in App. I., post, p. 1892.

Where the sections as to common lodging-houses (ss. 69—75, constituting Part V. of the Act) contained in the P. H. A., 1907, have been applied to any district the scope of the code upon this subject contained in the Act of 1875 will be considerably enlarged. The Act of 1907 is set out, post, p. 1096, but the sections relating to common lodging-houses are also noticed in their appropriate places in the notes under this and the following sections. Attention should, however, here be called to the provision contained in s. 75 (1) of the 1907 Act, that, "At a time not less than one month before the commencement of this Part of this Act the local authority shall give notice of the fact to the keeper of every common lodging-house in their district."

Section 76.

In London, the Common Lodging-houses Acts, 1851 and 1853, are still in force, and additional provisions as to common lodging-houses (inter alia, as to licensing keepers thereof), are contained in the London County Council (General Powers) Acts, 1902, 1904 and 1907.

(b) Note that this provision is imperative. The keeper of a common lodging-house, having fulfilled the necessary preliminaries under s. 78, applied to be registered under this section, and the authority passed a resolution that his house should be registered. The clerk did not carry out this resolution, and neither the keeper nor his house was formally registered. Eight months afterwards the authority resolved that his house should not be registered, and two months later they prosecuted him for keeping a common lodging-house without being registered. It was held that for the purposes of the Act the resolution of the authority constituted registration and that the justices were right in refusing to convict (Coles v. Fibbens (1884), 49 J. P. 308 ; 52 L. T. 358).

When once a house or keeper has been registered, semble, express statutory authority must be shown for cancelling such registration : see Blake v. Kelly, in notes to s. 88, post, p. 158.

(c) With regard to the meaning of the word keeper, the law officers already "Keepers." referred to in note (a) advised that where a person neither resides in the house nor exercises any control over its management, but simply receives the rent, he cannot be considered the keeper ; but where the owner, though not resident in the house, either in person or through an agent, colourably or otherwise, exercises control over its management, they had no doubt that he should be considered the keeper. Halligan v. Ganly (1868), 19 L. T. 268, a decision of the Common Pleas in Ireland, which appears at first sight to be contrary to this opinion, will be found to turn entirely on the definitions of public lodging-house and keeper in a local Act (27 & 28 Vict. c. cccv. s. 4). It is not, therefore, an authority on the interpretation of the above section.

Where s. 71 of the P. H. A., 1907, has been applied to any district, a duty with reference to deputy lodging-house keepers is imposed. By it, "(1) The local authority shall keep a register for the purposes of this section, and shall enter therein the name of any person whose name is submitted to them by a common lodging-house keeper as his deputy, and who is approved by them for the purpose. (2) The local authority may register more than one deputy for any common lodging-house keeper. (3) The local authority, if at any time they are of opinion that any person registered as a deputy of a common lodging-house keeper is not a fit person for the purpose, may cancel the registration."

77. A person shall not (a) keep a common lodging-house or receive a lodger therein unless the house is registered in accordance with the provisions of this Act ; nor unless his name as the keeper thereof is entered in the register kept under this Act : Provided that when the person so registered dies, his widow or any member of his family (b) may keep the house as a common lodging-house for not more than four weeks after his death without being registered as the keeper thereof.

is no provision under which a person can be summarily convicted for keeping, or receiving lodgers in, a registered house without being registered as its keeper: semble, he must be proceeded against, if at all, by indictment for the common law misdemeanor of infringing a statutory provision. As to registering "deputy keepers," see note (c) under s. 76.

(b) This is a word of wide extent and difficult to define. It will, doubtless, be best interpreted by the circumstances of each case. There is no authority for confining it to the person's children. See s. 87, post, p. 157.

Local
authority may refuse
houses.

78. A house shall not be registered as a common lodging-house until it has been inspected and approved (a) for the purpose by some officer of the local authority (b); and the local authority may refuse (c) to register as the keeper of a common lodging-house a person who does not produce to the local authority a certificate of character, in such form as the local authority direct, signed by three inhabitant householders of the parish respectively rated to the relief of the poor of the parish within which the lodging-house is situate for property of the yearly rateable value (d) of six pounds or upwards.

Rules for inspection.

(a) From the Memorandum of the L. G. B., quoted on p. 149, ante, the following observations are taken: To the thoroughness of this inspection much importance should be attached. It is essential that in all structural details the fitness of the premises should be carefully ascertained before the house is placed on the register. The rules which should guide the inspecting officer in his examination of the premises may be thus briefly indicated: The house should (1) possess the conditions of wholesomeness needed for dwelling-houses in general; and (2) it should have arrangements fitting it for its special purpose of receiving a given number of lodgers.

(1) The house should be dry in its foundations, and have proper drainage, guttering, and spouting, with properly laid and substantial paving to any area or yard abutting on it. Its drains should have their connections properly made, and they should be trapped when necessary, and adequately ventilated. Except the soil pipe from a properly trapped water-closet, there should be no direct communication of the drains with the interior of the house. All waste pipes from sinks, basins, and cisterns should discharge in the open air over gullies outside the house. The soil pipe should always be efficiently ventilated. The closets and privies and the refuse receptacles of the house should be in proper situations, of proper construction, and adapted to any scavenging arrangements that may be in force in the district. The house should have a water supply of good quality, and, if the water be stored in cisterns, they should be conveniently placed, and of proper construction to prevent any fouling of the water. The walls, roof and floors of the house should be in good repair. Inside walls should not be papered. The rooms and staircases should possess the means of complete ventilation, windows being of adequate size, able to be opened to their full extent, or if sash windows, both at top and bottom. Any room proposed for registration that has not a chimney should be furnished with a special ventilating opening or shaft, but a room not having a window to the outer air, even if it have special means of ventilation, can seldom be proper for registration.

(2) The numbers for which the house and each sleeping room may be registered will depend partly upon the dimensions of the rooms and their facilities for ventilation, and partly upon the amount of accommodation of other kinds. In rooms of ordinary construction to be used for sleeping, where there are the usual means of ventilation by windows and chimneys, about 300 cubic feet will be a proper standard of space to secure to each person; but in many rooms it will be right to appoint a larger space, and this can only be determined on inspection of the particular room. The house should possess kitchen and day-room accommodation apart from its bedrooms, and the sufficiency of this will have to be attended to. Rooms that are partially underground may not be improper for day-rooms, but should not be registered for use as bedrooms. The amount of water supply, closet, or privy accommodation, and the provision of refuse receptacles should be proportionate to the numbers for which the house is to be registered. If the water is not supplied from works with constant service, a quantity should be secured for daily use on a scale, per registered inmate, of not less than ten gallons a day where there are water-closets, or five gallons a day where there are dry closets. For every twenty registered lodgers a separate closet or privy should be required. The washing accommodation should, wherever practicable, be in a special place and not in the bedroom, and the basins for personal washing should be fixed, and have water taps and discharge-pipes connected with them.

Note to
Section 78.

(b) The keeper should give notice to the authority and request them to send the proper officer to inspect. That officer is to approve of the house when he has inspected it. It is to be observed that, if the house is inspected and approved, the authority have no discretion enabling them to refuse to register. "The Act imposes an obligation on the local authority to complete the registration of a common lodging-house after they once pass over the opportunity for refusal provided by the 78th section" (per MATHEW, J., in Coles v. Fibbens, ante, p. 151). If the officer refuses to approve, the authority are not bound to hear the applicant in support of his application (Ex parte Kavanagh (1894), 10 T. L. R. 533).

(c) Where s. 69 of the P. H. A., 1907, has been applied to any district, a wider discretion as to registration is given, and new registrations are limited in duration. By it: "(1) The local authority may, at their discretion, refuse to register any person as a common lodging-house keeper, unless they are satisfied of his character and of his fitness for the position. (2) The registration of a person as a common lodging-house keeper shall, if that person is newly registered after the commencement of this section, remain in force only for such time not exceeding one year as may be fixed by the local authority, but may be renewed from time to time by the local authority."

the P. H. A., 1907, s. 69.

The above section is contained in Part V. of the Act of 1907, and by s. 75 (2): "On and after the commencement of this Part of this Act section seventy-eight from the words 'and the local authority may' to the end of the section, and section eighty-eight of the Public Health Act, 1875, shall be repealed as far as relates to the district."

(d) Probably this means net annual value, which is defined in s. 4, ante, p. 15.

79. The keeper of every common lodging-house shall, if required in writing by the local authority so to do, affix and keep undefaced and legible a notice with the words, "Registered Common Lodging-house," in some conspicuous place on the outside of such house.

Notice of registration to be affixed to houses.

The keeper of any such house who, after requisition in writing from the local authority, refuses or neglects to affix or renew such notice, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds, and to a further penalty of ten shillings for every day that such refusal or neglect continues after conviction.

See as to the recovery of this penalty, s. 251, post, p. 550.

Where s. 72 of the P. H. A., 1907, has been applied in any district the court may also cancel the registration of the keeper.

80. Every local authority shall from time to time make bye-laws (a)—

Byclaws to be made by local authority.

- (1) For fixing and from time to time varying (b) the number of lodgers who may be received into a common lodging-house, and for the separation of the sexes therein; and
- (2) For promoting cleanliness and ventilation in such houses; and

- Section 80. (3) For the giving of notices and the taking precautions (c) in the case of any infectious disease ; and
 (4) Generally for the well ordering of such houses (d).

Byelaws.

(a) As to the making of byelaws, see s. 182, post, p. 431 ; as to their confirmation, s. 184, post, p. 440 ; and as to their enforcement, s. 251, post, p. 550. Model byelaws have been issued by the L. G. B. for the use of sanitary authorities under this section ; and it will be convenient if these are adopted with as little variation as the circumstances of each case will permit. See Mackenzie and Handford's Model Byelaws, Vol. I., p. 57. For form of resolution adopting byelaws, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 322, and see also, at pp. 324, 325, forms relating to the fixing of maximum number of lodgers.

The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, provides that the sanitary authority within whose district any seaport town is situate may, with the approval of the President of the Board of Trade, from time to time make, revoke, alter, and amend byelaws relating to seamen's lodging-houses in such town. See s. 214 thereof in App. I., post, p. 1892.

(b) The provision for varying the number is new. Lord CAIRNS advised that when the number had been fixed it could not be varied under the previous Acts.

(c) This was new. See s. 84, post, p. 155. See also ss. 120—130, post, pp. 224—235, as to infectious diseases, especially s. 128, which imposes a penalty on persons who let houses or rooms in which infected persons have been lodging.

(d) These are very general words, and apply not only to the state of the house, but, as it seems, to the conduct of the inmates, so that any disorder in a house may be prevented. The model byelaws do not, however, contain any provisions of this nature.

Provisions of the P. H. A., 1907, s. 70.

Where s. 70 of the P. H. A., 1907, has been applied to any district, an obligation is imposed on the keeper or deputy-keeper of a lodging-house to manage and exercise supervision. By it : “(1) Either the keeper of a common lodging-house or a deputy registered under this Act shall manage and control the lodging-house and exercise supervision over those using it, and either the keeper or the deputy so registered shall be and remain at the lodging-house between the hours of nine in the evening and six in the morning of the following day. (2) If any provision of this section is not complied with in the case of any common lodging-house, the keeper of the house shall, unless he shows to the court that there was a reasonable excuse for the non-compliance, be liable in respect of each offence to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings, and to a daily penalty not exceeding twenty shillings.”

Power of local authority to require supply of water to houses.

81. Where it appears to any local authority that a common lodging-house is without a proper supply of water for the use of the lodgers, and that such a supply can be furnished thereto at a reasonable rate (a), the local authority may by notice in writing (b) require the owner (c) or keeper of such house, within a time specified therein, to obtain such supply, and to do all works necessary for that purpose (d) ; and if the notice be not complied with accordingly, the local authority may remove such house from the register until it is complied with.

Provisions of the P. H. A., 1907, s. 74, as to sanitary conveniences.

Where s. 74 of the P. H. A., 1907, has been applied to any district, the provision of proper sanitary conveniences may be enforced. That section provides as follows :

“(1) Every common lodging-house, whether registered before or after the commencement of this section, shall be provided—

“(a) With sufficient and suitable sanitary conveniences, having regard to the number of persons who may be received in that house, and also, where persons of both sexes are received in the common lodging-house, with proper separate accommodation for persons of each sex ; and

"(b) With a water supply laid on sufficient for flushing any water-closets or urinals which are used in the house.

Note to
Section 81.

"(2) If it appears to the local authority that, in the case of any common lodging-house, default is made in any respect in complying with the provisions of this section, the local authority may, by notice in writing specifying the default, require the keeper of the common lodging-house to remedy the default.

"(3) If within twenty-eight days of the notice being served the default is not remedied to the satisfaction of the local authority, they may themselves do the work required to be done, and may recover in a summary manner from the keeper of the common lodging-house the expenses incurred by them in so doing, or may by order declare these expenses to be private improvement expenses."

(a) It appears that this is a matter for the determination of the local authority. See the general provisions for the supply of water, s. 62, ante, p. 134 ; and the Public Health (Water) Act, 1878, post, p. 700.

(b) See as to such notice and its service, ss. 266, 267. A form of notice is given in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 327.

(c) See definition in s. 4, ante, p. 8. As the notice may be given to the owner or keeper it will be right, if the notice be given to the former, that the latter should also receive information ; otherwise his name may be removed from the register without his knowledge. The better plan will be to serve the notice on both.

(d) Query, whether these words enable the authority to specify the works to be done. See the cases on similar words in the notes to s. 94, post, p. 173.

82. The keeper of a common lodging-house shall, to the satisfaction of the local authority, limewash the walls and ceilings thereof in the first week of each of the months of April and October in every year, and shall if he fails to do so be liable to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings. Limewashing of houses.

This penalty will be over and above what he may be required to do under any byelaw. As to the recovery of this penalty, see s. 251, post, p. 550.

83. The keeper of a common lodging-house in which beggars or vagrants are received to lodge shall from time to time, if required in writing by the local authority so to do, report to the local authority, or to such person as the local authority direct, every person who resorted to such house during the preceding day or night, and for that purpose schedules shall be furnished by the local authority to the person so ordered to report, which schedules he shall fill up with the information required and transmit to the local authority. Power to order reports from keepers of houses
receiving

For a form of notice to be given by the authority and also a form of report, see the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at pp. 328, 329.

If the local authority act upon this section they must specify for what period the report is to be made. The mode of transmission is not stated, but transmission by post will probably be sufficient. Failure to make this report renders the keeper liable to a penalty under s. 86, post, p. 156.

The Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871, s. 10, contains provisions as to harbouring thieves or reputed thieves in lodging-houses, or suffering them to meet or assemble therein. Lodging-houses may be searched for idle and disorderly persons, etc., on a warrant under the Vagrancy Act, 1824, s. 13.

84. The keeper of a common lodging-house shall, when a person in such house is ill of fever or any infectious disease (a), give immediate notice (b) thereof to the medical officer of health (c) of the local authority, Keepers to give notice of fever, etc.
therein.

Section 84. and also to the poor law relieving officer of the union or parish in which the common lodging-house is situated (d).

(a) See the provisions of ss. 120—130, post, pp. 224—235, as to infectious diseases. The byelaws under s. 80, ante, p. 153, may contain provisions similar in effect to this section.

See also the provisions of the Infectious Disease (Notification) Act, 1889, post, p. 796.

(b) This statute does not require notice in writing, and in cases in which it is not superseded by the Infectious Disease (Notification) Act, 1889, a verbal notice may be held to be sufficient, but it is most desirable that it should be in writing. For form of notice, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 326. The model byelaws require a written notice to be given (No. 18) (Mackenzie and Handford's Model Byelaws, Vol. I., p. 68). The duty to give notice is absolute, and want of personal knowledge will not excuse the keeper if his deputy was aware of the case (Logsdon v. Holland (1898), 14 T. L. R. 449; 42 Sol. J. 523).

(c) The Common Lodging-Houses Act, 1851, s. 11, required the notice to be given to the medical officer of the union, but now it is to be given to the medical officer of health of the authority appointed under s. 189 or s. 190, post.

(d) Section 124, post, p. 228, provides for the removal of the sick person to a hospital in certain cases.

See s. 86, infra, as to the penalty of non-compliance with the provisions of this section. In places where the P. H. A., 1890, is in operation the keeper will be liable to a penalty under s. 32 of that Act. See that section and the notes thereto, post, p. 849.

inspection.

85. The keeper of a common lodging-house, and every other person having or acting in the care or management thereof, shall, at all times when required by any officer (a) of the local authority, give him free access to such house or any part thereof; and any such keeper or person who refuses such access shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds (b).

(a) The section does not require such officer to produce any specific authority for his demand of inspection, thus varying 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, s. 66. Moreover, the limitation of the hours of admission therein specified is omitted.

The keeper of a common lodging-house, on access to the house being demanded by two officers of a local authority, refused access (1) to a room which opened off a licensed room and could only be entered through it (this room had not been observed when the premises were inspected with a view to the licence being granted, and was not itself licensed); (2) to two rooms which were licensed, but which he had shut off entirely from the rest of the house, which had a separate entrance to the street, and which, after giving notice to the local authority that he had ceased to use them as part of the lodging-house, he had let to a monthly tenant:—Held, that in refusing access to the first-mentioned room he had contravened the statute, but otherwise in regard to the other two rooms (Gunn v. Cadenhead (1888), 15 Ct. of Sess. Cas., 4th series (J. C.) 57).

Offences by keepers of houses.

86. Any keeper of a common lodging-house who—

- (1) Receives any lodger in such house without the same being registered under this Act (a); or
- (2) Fails to make a report, after he has been furnished by the local authority with schedules for the purpose in pursuance of this Act (b), of the persons resorting to such house; or

(3) Fails to give the notice required by this Act where any person has been confined to his bed in such house by fever or other infectious disease (c), shall be liable to a penalty (d) not exceeding five pounds, and in the case of a continuing offence to a further penalty not exceeding forty shillings for every day during which the offence continues (e). Section 86.

(a) See s. 77, ante, p. 151. Possibly registration under previous sanitary Acts may suffice, but it would be advisable to register again under this Act. As to what amounts to registration, see Coles v. Fibbens, ante, p. 151. Where s. 73 of the P. H. A., 1907, has been applied to any district, it dispels any doubt as to whether an unregistered keeper is liable to penalties under this section.

(c) See s. 84, ante, p. 155. See also the Infectious Disease (Notification) Act, 1889, and the P. H. A., 1890, post, pp. 796, 818. The last-mentioned Act, by s. 32 (where it is in force), imposes a penalty of forty shillings and a daily penalty of five shillings if the keeper of a lodging-house fails to give notice under s. 84, ante, p. 155, even when the person suffering from fever, etc. has not been "confined to his bed."

(e) There is no reference here to breach of the byelaws, as this is provided for in ss. 183, 251, post, pp. 439, 550. The continuing here, it is presumed, must refer to offences against sub-ss. (2), (3).

87. In any proceedings under the provisions of this Act relating to common lodging-houses, if the inmates of any house or part of a house allege that they are members of the same family (a), the burden of proving such allegation shall lie on the person making it. Evidence as to "family" in proceedings.

(a) It does not appear why the allegation should be made. The corresponding s. 41 of the Sanitary Act, 1866, was applicable to prosecutions for overcrowding, but no such mischief is provided for in lodging-houses specially. It may be material, however, with reference to the question whether a house is a lodging-house or not: see s. 76, note (a), ante, p. 149. It may also be material when considering an alleged infringement of a byelaw whereby provision is made for the separation of the sexes, where the family is young and consists of both sexes.

It may be doubtful what is meant by the word family. See s. 77, ante, p. 151, and s. 91, post, p. 162, where the word occurs again.

88. Where the keeper of a common lodging-house is convicted of a third offence against any of the provisions of this Act (a) relating to common lodging-houses, the court before whom the conviction for such third offence takes place may, if it thinks fit, adjudge that he shall not at any time within five years after the conviction, or within such shorter period after the conviction as the court thinks fit, keep a common lodging-house without the previous licence in writing of the local authority, which licence the local authority may withhold or grant on such terms and conditions as they think fit. Conviction for third offence to disqualify persons from keeping common lodging-houses.

(a) It is very doubtful whether convictions under previous Acts can be brought under the purview of this section. The section is penal, and will probably be construed strictly, in accordance with the general rule for the interpretation of penal statutes.

Forms of licence and of application for licence under s. 88, supra, will be found in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 332.

As to the punishment of an unregistered person who keeps a common lodging-house, see notes to s. 77, ante, p. 151.

Note to
Section 88.

Section 72 of the P. H. A., 1907, provides that : "Where the keeper of a common lodging-house is convicted of any offence against any provision of the Public Health Acts or this Act relating to common lodging-houses, or of any byelaw made thereunder, the court before whom he is convicted may cancel his registration as a common lodging-house keeper, and he shall cease to be registered accordingly." But this section will only be operative in those districts in which it is applied by an Order of the L. G. B. In any district in which Part V. of the Act of 1907 (which includes s. 72, supra) is applied, s. 88 of the Act of 1875 will be repealed. See s. 75 (2) of the Act of 1907.

K. was duly entered in the register of the B. authority as keeper of a common lodging-house. Two months later the inspector reported that it was kept as a house of bad repute, and the health committee, by resolution, purported to cancel K.'s registration, and ordered him to clear out his lodgers in a week. On his refusal he was charged with keeping the house without being registered :—Held, the justices were right in dismissing the information, as there was no power to cancel the registration except for the reasons set forth in the statute (Blake v. Kelly (1887), 52 J. P. 263).

tion of "common lodging-
house."

89. For the purposes of this Act the expression "common lodging-house" includes, in any case in which only part of a house is used as a common lodging-house, the part so used of such house.

It is difficult to say who is the keeper of the lodging-house in this case, whether the person who is the landlord or tenant of the whole house or the tenant of that part which is let and is so appropriated to the use of lodgers.

See the observations as to the difference in the meaning of the words "includes" and "means," p. 6, ante, and see the note on s. 76, ante, p. 149, as to the meaning of the expression "common lodging-house."

Byelaws as to Houses let in Lodgings (a).

Power of local authority to make byelaws as to houses let in lodgings.

90. The Local Government Board may, if they think fit, by notice published in the London Gazette, declare the following enactment to be in force within the district or any part of the district of any local authority, and from and after the publication of such notice such authority (b) shall be empowered to make byelaws (c) for the following matters ; (that is to say,)

- (1) For fixing and from time to time varying the number of persons who may occupy a house or part of a house which is let in lodgings or occupied by members of more than one family (d), and for the separation of the sexes in a house so let or occupied :
- (2) For the registration of houses so let or occupied :
- (3) For the inspection of such houses :
- (4) For enforcing drainage and the provision of privy accommodation for such houses (e), and for promoting cleanliness and ventilation in such houses :
- (5) For the cleansing and lime-washing at stated times (f) of the premises, and for the paving of the courts and courtyards thereof :
- (6) For the giving of notices and the taking of precautions in case of any infectious disease (g).

This section shall not apply to common lodging-houses within the provisions of this Act relating to common lodging-houses (h).

and
"lodgings."

(a) In many decisions a distinction has been drawn between houses which are let in separate tenements, the landlord retaining no control over the house ; and

Note to
Section 90.

houses in which, though some or all of the rooms are let, the landlord resides personally or by an agent, and exercises some control. The tenants of the tenements in the former case were held not to be lodgers within the meaning of the Registration Acts in Bradley v. Baylis (1881), 8 Q. B. D. 195 ; 45 J. P. 847 ; Ancketill v. Baylis (1882), 10 Q. B. D. 577 ; 47 J. P. 356. These decisions appear to be of general application, and if so, they limit the number of houses to which this section applies. In Bradley v. Baylis, supra, JESSEL, M.R., made the following observations : "First of all, take the case of a lodger. It seems to me, as to unfurnished lodgings (and I will only deal with unfurnished lodgings, as it is the only class of cases with reference to which questions are likely to arise), where the owner of the house does not let the whole of it, but retains a part of his own residence and resides there, and when he does not let out the passages, staircase, and outer door, but gives to the inmates merely a right of ingress and egress, and retains to himself the general control, with the right of interfering—I do not mean an actual interference, but a right to interfere, a right to turn out trespassers, and so on—there I consider such owner is the occupying tenant of the house, and the inmate, whether he has or has not the exclusive use of the room, is a lodger. That is one extreme case. Now, I take another case, where the landlord lets out the whole of the house into separate apartments, and lets out each floor separately, so as to demise the passages, reserving simply to each inmate of the upper floors the right of ingress and egress over the lower passages, but parts entirely with the whole legal ownership, for the term demised, and retains no control over the house ; there, in my opinion, the inmates are occupying tenants, and are capable of being rated as such. That is an extreme case on the other side. There will be an immense number of intermediate cases, which, as I said before, can only be dealt with as they arise. Take such a case as the first of those before us. Does it make any difference that the inmates have latch-keys to the outer door and also keys to the inner door ? I think not. Does it make any difference that the landlord does not reside there personally, but has resident servants who occupy on his behalf part of the house ? I think not. I think that the inmates are still lodgers. Does it make any difference that the landlord does or does not repair ? I think not ; they are still lodgers."

When rooms in a house are let out to separate occupiers the mere fact that the landlord resides in a separate set of rooms in the house does not of itself convert such occupiers from inhabitant occupiers into lodgers. But such occupiers are merely lodgers when the resident landlord has a right of control over their rooms (Kent v. Fittall, [1906] 1 K. B. 60 ; 69 J. P. 428). See also Phillips v. Henson (1877), 3 C. P. D. 26 ; 42 J. P. 137 ; Morton v. Palmer (1882), 9 Q. B. D. 89 ; 46 J. P. 150 ; Ness v. Stephenson (1882), 9 Q. B. D. 245 ; 47 J. P. 134 ; Douglas v. Smith, [1907] 2 K. B. 568 ; 71 J. P. 433 ; R. v. Bell (1907), 71 J. P. 542 ; 24 T. L. R. 66 ; Kent v. Fittall (No. 3), [1909] 1 K. B. 215 ; 73 J. P. 33 ; Kent v. Fittall (No. 4), [1911] 2 K. B. 1102 ; 75 J. C. 637 ; Steele v. Mahon, [1910] 2 I. R. 207.

Kent v. Fittall (No. 4), supra, was distinguished in Smith v. Newman, [1912] 1 K. B. 162 ; 76 J. P. 25, and followed in Havercroft v. Dewey (1913), 77 J. P. 115 ; 108 L. T. 296.

In Ness v. Stephenson, supra, it was held that if the landlord, reserving a room in a house, lets the rest of it to a person, but retains such control and dominion over it as is usually retained by masters of houses let in lodgings, the relation of landlord and lodger may exist between the parties for the purposes of such an Act as the Lodgers' Goods Protection Act, 1871 (see now the Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1908), although the lodger has the right of exclusively occupying the greater part of the premises and has separate and uncontrolled power of ingress and egress, and neither the landlord nor his agent sleeps or resides in the house and his lodger acts as caretaker of the part reserved ; and that the existence of the relationship of landlord and lodger is a question of fact. In a later case decided with reference to the same Act, the appellant occupied the first floor and basement of premises at a yearly rent, carrying on the business of a publisher there, but sleeping and residing elsewhere. He had no key of the outer door, which was under the control of his immediate landlord, who admitted him every morning. It was held that he was not a lodger. A lodger in the popular sense of the word means one who sleeps on the premises (Heavood v. Bone (1884), 13 Q. B. D. 179; 48 J. P. 710).

A byelaw made under this section required certain particulars to be furnished to the authority by the occupier of houses let in lodgings or occupied by members of more than one family. On a summons under this byelaw, it was proved that B. was the tenant of a house, sub-letting unfurnished rooms to one person and occupying the rest of the house herself. It was held that the house was a "lodging-house" within the meaning of the byelaw and that there was nothing unreasonable in a byelaw applying to such a house (Roots v. Beaumont (1886), 51 J. P. 197). See also as to the meaning of the expression "house which is let in lodgings or occupied by members of more than one family," cases in note (d), infra.

The L. G. B. have issued model byelaws under this section. See Mackenzie and Handford's Model Byelaws, Vol. I., p. 445. In the memorandum prefixed to the byelaws it is stated that the Board have had regard to the remarks of the judges in the case of Langdon v. Broadbent (p. 150, ante), and have exempted from the operation of the byelaws certain houses let in lodgings which from their character are not likely to require supervision. The memorandum states that the exemption clause consists of two sections, of which one relates to unfurnished, and the other to furnished lodgings. It assumes that all houses below a certain rateable value will, if let in lodgings or occupied by members of more than one family, be within the scope of the byelaws. In the case of houses of higher rateable value the clause confers exemption if the rent of each lodger exceeds a certain minimum. It will rest with the local authority, when framing byelaws upon the basis of the model series, to determine what limits of rateable value or rent the circumstances of their district may render it desirable to prescribe.

For form of resolution adopting byelaws, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 322.

(b) By the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1885, s. 8, post, p. 729, local authorities are now empowered to make byelaws under this section without any declaration by the L. G. B. The effect of this enactment is practically to repeal the opening words of this section down to and including the word "notice."

Byelaws.

(c) As to the making, confirmation, publication, and enforcing of byelaws, see ss. 182—186, 251, post, pp. 431, 550. As to the houses which should be affected by such byelaws, see note (a), supra.

By the Housing, Town Planning, etc. Act, 1909, s. 16, the power of making and enforcing byelaws under this section (or in London under the similar section (s. 94) of the P. H. (London) A., 1891), is now, in the case of houses intended for the working classes, extended to the making and enforcing of byelaws imposing any duty (being a duty which may be imposed by the byelaws, and which involves the execution of work) upon the owner in addition to or in substitution for any other person having an interest in the premises. For the purpose of discharging any duty so imposed the owner or other person is given a right of entry. See s. 16 (1), (2) in extenso, post, p. 1165. These provisions get rid of the difficulty disclosed in Arlidge v. Islington Borough Council, infra.

If an owner or other person fails to execute any work which he has been required to execute under the byelaws, the authority may, after giving the prescribed notice, execute such work at his expense (Housing, Town Planning, etc. Act, 1909, s. 16 (3), post, p. 1166).

Byelaws made under the similar section (s. 94) of the P. H. (London) A., 1891, provided "that the landlord in the first week in April in every year, and at such other times as the condition thereof may render it necessary, shall cause every part of the premises of a house let in lodgings or inhabited by members of more than one family to be cleansed, and the ceilings and interior walls to be lime-washed." In one case "landlord" was defined as the person who received the rack-rent of the premises; and in the other case the definition included the person who received the profits arising from the letting of the house as a lodging-house. It was held in each case that the byelaw was unreasonable, and therefore invalid, because it did not provide for notice being given to the landlord, who was the person made responsible, and who might have no knowledge of any offence being committed. It was held, also, by Lord ALVERSTONE, C.J., and KENNEDY, J., WILLS, J., dissenting, that the byelaw in requiring the work to be done throughout a whole borough in one week (which might be Easter week) was not unreasonable (Stiles v. Galinski; Nokes and Nokes v. Islington Borough Council (No. 2), [1904] 1 K. B. 615; 68 J. P. 183). A byelaw made under the same section provided that: "Subject to the provisions of these byelaws the landlord of a lodging-house shall, in the month of April, May, or June in every year, cause every part of the premises to be cleansed . . ." The word "landlord" was defined by the byelaws to mean, in relation to a lodging-house, the person for the time being receiving the rack-rent of the lodging-house, whether on his own account or as agent or trustee for any other person, or who would so receive the same if such premises were let at a rack-rent. It was held that the byelaw was unreasonable and therefore invalid, as it cast upon landlords an obligation which they might not be able to obey without committing a breach of contract or a trespass (Arldge v. Islington Borough Council, [1909] 2 K. B. 127; 73 J. P. 201); but see now s. 16 of the Act of 1909, supra.

Note to
Section 90.

A byelaw was proposed by an urban district council requiring the landlord of a lodging-house on receiving from the council a notice or placard wherein should be stated the description or number and the dimensions or cubical contents of the room to which such notice or placard may apply, and the maximum number of persons authorised to be received at any one time in such room, to put up, affix and continue such notice or placard in a suitable and conspicuous position in such room, and in such a manner that the words and figures in such notice or placard may be clearly and distinctly visible and legible. Also that neither he nor a lodger in the lodging-house should at any time wilfully conceal, deface, alter or obliterate any letter or figure in such notice or placard, or wilfully or carelessly injure or destroy such notice or placard. The L. G. B. took the view that it could not be accepted as within the powers of the district council under the section.

(d) See the notes on this word in ss. 77 and 87, ante, pp. 151, 157. The expression "house let in lodgings or occupied by members of more than one family" occurs also in s. 94 of the P. H. (London) A., 1891, and in a case under that section it was held that a block of artisans' dwellings, where the landlord did not reside, and which was divided into tenements occupied severally by different families, was not such a house, and that therefore the authority had no power to make byelaws for the regulation of the building (Weatheritt v. Cantlay, [1901] 2 K. B. 285; 65 J. P. 644). In a later case it was decided that the following was such a house, viz.: an ordinary six-roomed house not specially constructed to be let in separate tenements, which had a common staircase and one common front door which was always kept open; on each floor were two rooms let to and occupied by a separate family; and the landlord did not reside on the premises or have any representative residing there (Kyffin v. Simmons (1903), 67 J. P. 227; 1 L. G. R. 381).

In the model series above mentioned the L. G. B. have deemed it inexpedient to provide for a variation of the number of occupants or for the separation of the sexes. The omission of the latter provision is due "to the doubt which the Board have entertained as to how far this desirable object can be practically attained, in view of the ordinary conditions of life in lodgings of the poorer class. When, however, the local authority are satisfied that a rule on this subject can be enforced without hardship, as, for instance, in cases where it is found that individual holdings in the lodging-houses of a district generally comprise two or more rooms, the Board will readily co-operate with the authority in framing a byelaw to provide for the separation of the sexes."

(e) These byelaws will not prevent the enforcing of the provisions of this Act which apply to these matters. No byelaws as to drainage are included in the model series, as the Board considered the statutory provisions on this subject to be sufficient without them.

(f) These times must be stated in the byelaws. As to the reasonableness of a time so fixed, see Stiles v. Galinski, supra. See s. 82, ante, p. 155, as to common lodging-houses.

(g) Byelaws for these purposes are now unnecessary in view of the provisions of the Infectious Disease (Notification) Act, 1889, and the Infectious Disease (Notification) Extension Act, 1899, post, pp. 796, 1079.

(h) This passage was introduced from the Sanitary Act, 1866, s. 36, which was passed when the Common Lodging-house Acts were in force.

Definition of
nuisances.

91. For the purposes of this Act—

1. Any premises (b) in such a state (c) as to be a nuisance or injurious to health (d) :
2. Any pool ditch gutter watercourse privy urinal cesspool drain or ashpit (e) so foul or in such a state as to be a nuisance or injurious to health (d) :
3. Any animal (f) so kept as to be a nuisance or injurious to health (d) :
4. Any accumulation or deposit (g) which is a nuisance or injurious to health (d) :
5. Any house or part of a house so overcrowded as to be dangerous or injurious to the health of the inmates, whether or not members of the same family (h) :
6. Any factory, workshop, or workplace not already under the operation of any general Act for the regulation of factories or bakehouses (i), not kept in a cleanly state, or not ventilated in such a manner as to render harmless as far as practicable any gases vapours dust or other impurities generated in the course of the work carried on therein that are a nuisance or injurious to health (d), or so overcrowded while work is carried on as to be dangerous or injurious to the health of those employed therein (k) :
7. Any fireplace or furnace which does not as far as practicable consume the smoke (l) arising from the combustible used therein, and which is used for working engines by steam, or in any mill factory dyehouse brewery bakehouse or gaswork, or in any manufacturing or trade process whatsoever ; and shall be deemed to be nuisances (p) liable to be dealt with summarily in manner provided by this Act : Provided—

First (q). That a penalty shall not be imposed on any person in respect of any accumulation or deposit necessary for the effectual carrying on any business or manufacture if it be proved to the satisfaction of the court that the accumulation or deposit has not been kept longer than is necessary for the purposes of the business or manufacture, and that the best available means have been taken for preventing injury thereby to the public (r) health : Section 91.

Secondly (s). That where a person is summoned before any court in respect of a nuisance arising from a fireplace or furnace which does not consume the smoke arising from the combustible used in such fireplace or furnace, the court shall hold that no nuisance is created within the meaning of this Act and dismiss the complaint, if it is satisfied that such fireplace or furnace is constructed in such manner as to consume as far as practicable, having regard to the nature of the manufacture or trade, all smoke arising therefrom, and that such fireplace or furnace has been carefully attended to by the person having the charge thereof.

(a) Where s. 35 of the P. H. A., 1907, has been applied to any district, the class of nuisances specified in s. 91, supra, as nuisances liable to be dealt with summarily, will be extended so as to include the following : Extension of term by the P. H. A., 1907, s. 35.

- “(1) Any cistern used for the supply of water for domestic purposes so placed, constructed, or kept as to render the water therein liable to contamination, causing or likely to cause risk to health ;
- “(2) Any gutter, drain, shoot, stack-pipe, or down-spout of a building which by reason of its insufficiency or its defective condition shall cause damp in such building or in an adjoining building ; and
- “(3) Any deposit of material in or on any building or land which shall cause damp in such building or in an adjoining building so as to be dangerous or injurious to health.”

For a definition of a public nuisance, see the note under s. 111, post, p. 207.

(b) See the definition of “premises” in s. 4, ante, p. 7.

“Premises.”

It has been held that these words do not apply to a nuisance arising from sewage tanks and works constructed under this Act by a local authority, and that a court of summary jurisdiction has, therefore, no power, on proof of a nuisance so caused, to make an order for its abatement (R v. Parlby (1889), 22 Q. B. D. 520 ; 53 J. P. 327). WILLS, J., said (ibid.) : “It is clear that the expression ‘premises in such a state as to be a nuisance’ has not the wide application claimed for it by the respondents, who say that it is answered by any premises on which a nuisance exists. If that were so, the enumeration of, at all events, the several kinds of nuisance specified under the subsequent heads would be unnecessary. We do not attempt to define every class of case to which the first head applies, but we think it is confined to cases in which the premises themselves are decayed, dilapidated, dirty, or out of order, as, for instance, where houses have been inhabited by tenants whose habits and ways of life have rendered them filthy or impregnated with disease, or where foul matter has been allowed to soak into walls or floors, or where they are so dilapidated as to be a source of danger to life or limb.” So, too, the provisions of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, for the abatement of nuisances do not apply to a nuisance alleged to arise from a public sewer vested in the London County Council, and a court of summary jurisdiction has no power to deal with such an alleged nuisance (Fulham Vestry v. London C. C., [1897] 2 Q. B. 76 ; 61 J. P. 440). Sewage works and public sewers not included.

Therefore, if a nuisance arises from sewage works, the persons aggrieved are left to their remedy by action. An injunction in such a case was granted in Downing v. Falmouth United Sewerage Board (1888), 4 T. L. R. 552.

By the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1885, s. 9, post, p. 729, a tent, van, shed, or similar structure used for human habitation, which is in such a state as to be a nuisance or injurious to health, or which is so overcrowded as to be injurious to the health of the inmates, whether or not members of the same family, is to be deemed to be a nuisance within the meaning of this section. See also Att.-Gen. v. Brown and Att.-Gen. v. Stone, post, p. 165. Tents, vans etc.

Note to
Section 91.

“In such a
be, etc.

(c) The words of the clause are “premises in such a state,” etc. It would appear, therefore, that they apply only to premises which are a nuisance by reason of their condition, and not to premises which are a nuisance by reason of the purposes for which they are used. Thus, it is submitted that they would not apply to premises used for an offensive trade so long as the condition of the premises was not in question. Nor would they apply to a building which was a nuisance only by reason of its being used as a hospital for infectious diseases, as in Metropolitan Asylums District v. Hill (1881), 6 App. Cas. 193; 45 J. P. 664. There it was held that an asylum for the reception of poor persons suffering from smallpox or other infectious or contagious disorders may be a nuisance restrainable by injunction, though erected and maintained under the provisions of an Act which enables, but does not order, such asylums to be erected; and see Bendelow v. Wortley Union (Guardians of) (1887), 4 T. L. R. 67, and Garton v. Guildford, Godalming and Woking Joint Hospital Board, Times, March 23rd, 1895. On the other hand, it is submitted that a house which is a nuisance by reason of its being ruinous and likely to fall down might be a nuisance within this section. A house in such a condition may be a nuisance at common law (R. v. Watts (1703), 1 Salk. 357). See also s. 160, post, p. 361, as to ruinous and dangerous buildings. As to the liability of a person for allowing premises to be out of repair, and so a nuisance whereby injury is caused, see Payne v. Rogers (1794), 2 H. Bl. 350; Chauntler v. Robinson (1849), 4 Ex. 163; Leslie v. Pounds (1812), 4 Taunt. 649; Todd v. Flight (1860), 9 C. B. (N.S.) 377 (fall of a chimney); Gandy v. Fleming & Co. (1914), 51 Sc. L. R. 43; and Gaunt v. M'Intyre, [1914] S. C. 43 (defective common stair in tenement dwellings); Lane v. Cox, [1897] 1 Q. B. 415; Dickson v. Scott, Ltd. (1914), 30 T. L. R. 256 (injury to tenant's workman); Harold v. Watney, [1898] 2 Q. B. 320 (dangerous fence); Cavalier v. Pope, [1906] A. C. 428; Malone v. Laskey, [1907] 2 K. B. 141; and Dobson v. Horsley (1913), 30 T. L. R. 148 (injury to tenant's wife or child); Kennedy v. Bruce, [1907] S. C. 845 (injury to tenant's servant); Barker v. Herbert, [1911] 2 K. B. 633; 75 J. P. 481; Smith v. Keys (1912), 46 Ir. L. T. 68; and Dobson v. Horsley, supra (defective area railings). See also Ryall v. Kidwell, [1914] 3 K. B. 135, decided under the Housing, Town Planning, etc. Act, 1909, ss. 14, 15.

For an Irish case in which an unsuccessful attempt was made to prove that premises, viz., one flat in a house, were in such a state as to be a nuisance and injurious to health because the tenant of that flat had to pass through the lower flat in order to reach the only water-closet, see Belfast Corporation v. Thompson, on p. 99, ante.

In Att.-Gen. (ex rel. Strand District Board of Works) v. Kirk (1896), 12 T. L. R. 514, the plaintiff moved for an interlocutory injunction to restrain the defendant, a builder, from allowing an excavation or trench in a street to remain open, and from allowing the footpath on one side of the street to remain without a proper pavement. The defendant contended that the licence from the relators under which he opened the street had expired, and that in consequence of his having failed to carry out a building agreement in respect of a site adjoining the street the freeholder had determined it and claimed possession of the site. The Court of Appeal, finding that the defendant was not out of possession, restrained him so far as was necessary for the interim protection of the public, i.e., from allowing the excavation or trench to remain so as to be dangerous to the street, or the sewer or the adjoining houses, and also from allowing it to remain in such a state as to be or create a nuisance, or to be or become injurious to the public health.

As to a nuisance from an accumulation of soil causing damp to an adjoining house, whereby it becomes unhealthy, see Hurdman v. N. E. Rail. Co. (1878), 3 C. P. D. 168; 42 J. P. 388. See hereon s. 35 of the P. H. A., 1907, post, p. 1117.

Note to
Section 91.

It is at common law the duty of an owner of vacant land to prevent it from being a public nuisance, although such nuisance may be caused by the acts of others; and the Attorney-General, on behalf of the public, is entitled to an injunction to prevent an owner committing a breach of that duty (Att.-Gen. v. Tod-Heatley, [1897] 1 Ch. 560). See also Chibnall v. Paul & Son, infra; and see the P. H. A., 1907, s. 31, post, p. 1115, as to fencing vacant land.

In Att.-Gen. v. Brown and Others, Times, July 23rd, 1898, application was made for an injunction to restrain a landowner and two gipsies, from using or permitting to be used a small piece of ground as a gipsy encampment, so as to cause a nuisance. NORTH, J., on the landowner undertaking not to relet the land on any future occasion for a similar purpose, refrained from granting an injunction against her, but granted an interlocutory injunction restraining the gipsies from using or occupying the land for the encampment of gipsies or like people without previously making sanitary arrangements to the satisfaction of the relators. See also Att.-Gen. v. Stone (1895), 60 J. P. 168.

Whenever the legislature has authorised a proprietor to make a particular use of his land, and the authority is permissive and not imperative, the legislature must be held to have intended that the use sanctioned is not to be in prejudice of the common law rights of others (Canadian-Pacific Rail. Co. v. Parke, [1899] A. C. 535).

(d) Upon similar words in 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, s. 10, it was held that the "Nuisance dripping of water from a railway bridge on to the road beneath was not a nuisance or injurious to health." within the Act (G. W. Rail. Co. v. Bishop (1872), L. R. 7 Q. B. 550; 37 J. P. 5). But though the word nuisance as used in this section does not include every common law nuisance (see also note (c), infra), it is not necessary that a nuisance in order to be within the section should also be injurious to health, for the terms used are disjunctive, nuisance or injurious. It is sufficient if the nuisance is one which interferes with personal comfort (per STEPHEN, J., in Bishop Auckland L. B. v. Bishop Auckland Iron Co. (1882), 10 Q. B. D. 138; 47 J. P. 389). In that case an accumulation or deposit of cinders, ashes, and refuse which was allowed to smoulder and throw off strong fumes, was held to be a nuisance and within this section, though it was not injurious to health. See also Banbury Sanitary Authority v. Page (decided upon similar words in s. 47) (1881), 8 Q. B. D. 97; 46 J. P. 184; Malton Sanitary Authority v. Malton Farmers' Manure Co. (1879), 4 Ex. D. 302; 44 J. P. 155; Houldershaw v. Martin (1885), 49 J. P. 179; 1 T. L. R. 323.

(e) As to this clause, see generally ss. 41, 47, ante, pp. 104, 114, and s. 45 of the P. H. A., 1907. As to gutters or drains causing damp in buildings, see s. 35 (2) of the Act of 1907, and as to cesspools, ashpits, etc., wells or disused wells, see ibid., s. 46.

It must be observed that this clause relates only to a "drain," not to a "sewer." What See per WILLS, J., in R. v. Parlbly, ante, p. 163, and Fulham (Vestry of) v. "drains," London C. C., ante, p. 163. See also Fordom v. Parsons, Molloy v. Gray, and etc. within Wincanton R. D. C. v. Parsons, cited at length on p. 51, ante. the section.

An owner of a publichouse erected a urinal in a private passage leading out of the street, and enclosed it between doors, which he kept locked at night. There was a space between the line of area railings in the street and the urinal door nearest to the street, which space he shut off from the street by an iron gate flush with the line of railings. This gate was never locked. Persons habitually used the space between the door and the gate in such a manner as to cause to the neighbours a nuisance, which he took no steps to prevent:—Held, by KAY, J., that he was responsible for such user, it being a probable consequence of the way in which he had arranged the premises (Chibnall v. Paul & Son (1881), 29 W. R. 536).

The appellants were entitled to discharge refuse from their chemical works by two separate drains into a public sewer. One drain discharged liquid impregnated with muriatic acid, and the other liquid impregnated with sulphur. Upon their combination in the sewer sulphuretted hydrogen gas was produced, which escaped in sufficient quantities to be injurious to the public health. No nuisance existed in the appellants' drains. The respondents had not properly flushed, cleansed and trapped the sewer. Upon complaint by the respondents of the escape of the sulphuretted hydrogen gas, justices made an order for the abatement thereof on the appellants:—Held, that the escape of the gas was a nuisance within the meaning of the corresponding provisions of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, s. 8; that it arose from the acts of the appellants, and that the respondents could lawfully make complaint thereof, although they themselves might have contributed to the existence of the nuisance (St. Helen's Chemical Co. v. Corporation of St. Helen's (1876), 1 Ex. D. 196; 40 J. P. 471). It is to be observed that this decision was given with reference to 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, which contains no definition of "drain" and "sewer," and it may be questioned whether the decision is applicable to this section.

Note to

In districts where ss. 16 and 17 of the P. H. A., 1890, post, p. 828, are in force, it is an offence to turn into a sewer any injurious matter or any chemical waste, steam, heated water, etc. which alone or in combination with the sewage causes a nuisance or is dangerous or injurious to health.

The appellants' predecessor in title deposited with the respondents a plan providing for the draining of certain houses into cesspools. The cesspools were not, however, constructed, and the appellants' predecessors, without permission, turned the slop and scullery water from the houses into a surface water drain, made by the respondents upon a highway upon which the houses abutted. The slop and scullery water passed through the drain into an open ditch and caused a nuisance. The respondents had not constructed any sewer by means of which the appellants could drain their houses. Upon a summons under s. 95 of the P. H. A., 1875, the justices made an order upon the appellants to abate the nuisance:—Held, that the nuisance arose from the want of a "structural convenience" within the meaning of s. 94, and that the order was therefore properly made; and held, further, that although the surface water drain was a "sewer" within the definition in s. 4, the appellants, even if they had given the notice prescribed by s. 21, would not have been entitled to use it to carry off their slop and scullery water (Kinson Pottery Co. v. Poole Corporation, [1899] 2 Q. B. 41; 63 J. P. 580). See also the cases cited along with the last-mentioned case on pp. 78, 79, ante.

See R. v. Peddy (1834), 1 A. & E. 822, as to the erection and use of privies which became a nuisance for want of cleansing; Russell v. Shenton (1842), 3 Q. B. 449, as to a nuisance from omitting to cleanse drains.

Under the L. G. A., 1894, s. 8 (1), a parish council have power to deal with any pond, pool, open ditch, drain, or place containing or used for the collection of any drainage, filth, stagnant water, or matter likely to be prejudicial to health by draining, cleansing, covering it, or otherwise preventing it from being prejudicial to health, but so as not to interfere with any private right or the sewage or drainage works of any local authority. But by s. 8 (3) nothing in the section is to derogate from any obligation of a district council with respect to the execution of sanitary works.

animals.

(f) See s. 44, ante, p. 111, as to byelaws relating to the keeping of animals on premises; and s. 47 as to keeping swine in a dwelling-house, or so as to be a nuisance to any person. The proceedings under this and the following sections may in some cases be preferable to that under the byelaws or under s. 47. It will be observed that the byelaws under s. 44 relate only to the keeping of animals so as to be injurious to health. Again, s. 47 relates only to the keeping of swine, while this section applies generally to the keeping of any animals. The above provision is therefore much more extended in scope than either of the former sections. In addition to the cases cited in the notes to ss. 44, 47, Draper v. Sperring (1861), 25 J. P. 566; 10 C. B. (N.S.) 113, may be referred to. There sheep droppings in a market were held to amount to a nuisance.

As to the burial of carcases washed on shore, see the Diseases of Animals Act, 1894, s. 46; The Sueric, [1908] P. 292; 72 J. P. 407, and the Horses (Importation and Transit) Order, 1913, s. 19.

(g) As to this clause, see the first proviso to the section. On the subject generally, see ss. 42, 43, 49, ante, and cases cited in the notes thereto, and Draper v. Sperring, supra.

Note to Section 91.

As to deposits causing damp in buildings, see the P. H. A., 1907, s. 35 (3), post, p. 1117, and Hurdman v. N. E. Rail. Co., p. 165, ante. Where a stableman kept dung accumulating so that the neighbours had to shut their windows, he was held liable to be convicted under a local Act which imposed a penalty on offensive matter being kept so as to cause a nuisance (Smith v. Waghorn (1863), 27 J. P. 744). As to an accumulation of seaweed in a harbour, see Margate Pier and Harbour Proprietors v. Margate Town Council (1869), 33 J. P. 437; 20 L. T. 564.

In an action against a railway company for an alleged nuisance arising from smells proceeding from open trucks loaded with house refuse which were allowed to stand some hours at a junction, the court refused to grant an injunction on the ground that there was no remissness on the part of the company in the forwarding of the trucks, and that they were acting reasonably in carrying the refuse to the junction and detaining it there (Att.-Gen. v. S. E. & C. Rail. Cos.' Managing Committee (1902), 24 M. C. C. 343). On appeal (25 M. C. C. 280), the case was settled upon the defendants undertaking to put suitable coverings on the trucks and not to detain them under ordinary circumstances for a period exceeding two and a-half hours.

In Ireland it has been held that the accumulation or deposit must have an element of permanency, and that the loading and unloading of manure in the ordinary course from a railway company's waggons for delivery to customers was not within the corresponding enactment (G. N. Rail. Co. v. Lurgan Commissioners, [1897] 2 I. R. 340); cf. also L. B. & S. C. Rail. Co. v. Haywards Heath U.D. C. p. 113, ante.

A plea of enjoyment of right for twenty years of a mixen on defendant's land contiguous to plaintiff's house, whereby during all that time offensive smells necessarily and unavoidably arose from the said mixen, was held bad on the ground that it did not show a right to cause offensive smells on the plaintiff's premises, nor that any smells had in fact been used to pass beyond the limits of defendant's own land (Flight v. Thomas (1839), 10 A. & E. 590). See also Att.-Gen. v. Tod-Heatley, ante, p. 165; Bland v. Yates, post, p. 171. Defendants deposited on their land house refuse which caused a nuisance to adjoining occupiers by offensive smells and flies, particularly in summer and in certain states of the atmosphere and wind. The defendants' evidence was to the effect that at other times no nuisance was occasioned. JOYCE, J., granted an injunction restraining the defendants from bringing refuse on their land, so as to occasion a nuisance to the annoyance of persons in its neighbourhood, or so as to be or become injurious to the public health. He intimated that, if the defendants' evidence was correct, it was possible to bring the refuse on the land at certain times, though this must be done on their own responsibility, and that the injunction would not hinder them from doing this, so long as they did not occasion a nuisance (Att.-Gen. v. Keymer Brick Co. (1903), 67 J. P. 434; 1 L. G. R. 654).

(h) This passage renders immaterial the decision in Rye Union (Guardians of) v. Payne (1875), 44 L. J. M. C. 148; 39 J. P. 375).

In a Scotch case (Home v. Local Authority of Kelso (1876), 3 Coup. 239), it was held that where a landlord let along with a farm a cottage, into which a tenant put a bailiff, and the cottage was overcrowded by the bailiff's family, the tenant and not the landlord was liable for the nuisance.

Overcrowding in "houses," etc.

As to the overcrowding of a chapel used as a night shelter for destitute persons, see R. v. Mead, Ex parte Gates (1895), 64 L. J. M. C. 169; 59 J. P. 150. A notice directed to a person officially in charge of a night shelter that "the premises were so overcrowded as to be injurious or dangerous to the health of the inmates," and a summons and order founded upon such notice, were held to be sufficient to convey to the recipient that the nuisance complained of related to the overcrowding of a "house or part of a house," as referred to in the P. H. (London) A., 1891, s. 2 (1) (e). The temporary occupiers of such night shelters are equivalent to "inmates" of such house (R. v. Slade (1896), 65 L. J. M. C. 108; 60 J. P. 358).

Note to
Section 91.

"House" includes a day school, and "inmates" includes scholars (Wimbledon U. D. C. v. Hastings (1902), 67 J. P. 45 ; 87 L. T. 118).

As to overcrowding in tents, vans, sheds, etc, see the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1885, s. 9, post, p. 729.

(i) The words in italics were repealed by the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, s. 107, and Sched. VI. See as to bakehouses, ante, pp. 34, 42.

Factories,

(k) The Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, s. 1 (2), provides that the provisions of this section (s. 91) with respect to a factory, workshop or workplace not kept in a cleanly state or not ventilated or overcrowded, shall not apply to any "factory" to which s. 1 of that Act applies. That Act contains provisions relating to the sanitary condition of factories, workshops and workplaces ; but s. 2 (1) thereof provides that the provisions of the present section (s. 91), with respect to a factory, workshop or workplace not kept in a cleanly state, or not ventilated, or overcrowded, shall apply to every factory, etc. except any factory to which s. 1 of the Act of 1901 applies. For the full text of these provisions, see App. I., p. 1988.

The word "workplace," as used in s. 38 (1) of the P. H. (London) A., 1891, was held to have a wider meaning than factory or workshop. A stable and stable-yard, where a number of hirers of cabs attend as customers, is a "workplace," and must be provided with suitable accommodation in the way of sanitary conveniences (Bennett v. Harding, [1900] 2 Q. B. 397).

Furnace not
smoke.

(l) As to this clause, see the second proviso to this section and notes thereto. That proviso applies only to the first limb of this clause and not to the second. See also the provision in s. 108 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, with respect to the prevention of smoke. That provision is, however, not incorporated by the present Act.

Under similar words in the P. H. (Scotland) A., 1867 (which does not, however, contain any such proviso as the second proviso to this section), it was held that a furnace could not be said not to consume its own smoke as far as practicable merely because on a few isolated dates it did not do so ; the court said that the section contemplated a badly-constructed furnace, or systematic misuse of a well-constructed one (Dumfries Commissioners v. Murphy (1884), 11 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 694).

A local improvement Act enacted that every furnace used should be constructed so as to consume its own smoke, and that if any person should use a furnace not so constructed, or should use such furnace so negligently that the smoke should not be consumed, every person so offending, being the owner or occupier, or being a foreman or other person employed by such owner or occupier, should forfeit a sum of £5. W., the owner, used furnaces properly constructed, and employed a competent person to use them, but without W.'s knowledge, the servant negligently used them so that the smoke was not consumed. It was held (BLACKBURN, J., diss.) that the servant only could be convicted of the offence, and not the master (Willcocks v. Sands (1868), 32 J. P. 565).

A defendant, the owner and occupier of certain premises in the metropolis used for the purpose of manufacture, was summoned under the Smoke Nuisance (Metropolis) Act, 1853, s. 1, for negligently using a furnace in such premises so that the smoke arising therefrom was not effectually consumed. The furnace in question was constructed so as to consume its own smoke if carefully used ; and the emission of smoke complained of was caused by the carelessness of the stoker. The defendant was not personally guilty of any negligence in connection with the matter. It was held that he was not criminally responsible for the negligence of his servant, and could not be convicted (Chisholm v. Doulton (1889), 22 Q. B. D. 736 ; 53 J. P. 550). This case, however, was distinguished in Armitage, Ltd. v. Nicholson, [1913] W. N. 116 ; 77 J. P. 239, where under a differently worded section in a Bradford Act employers were held liable for the negligent stoking of their men.

In consequence of the saving clause in s. 44 of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121 (see now s. 334, post, p. 660), it was held that smelting works were exempt from the smoke provisions of the Nuisances Removal Acts (Norris v. Barnes (1872), L. R. 7 Q. B. 537 ; 37 J. P. 246). But s. 334, post, p. 660, qualifies the original saving by the words "so as to obstruct or interfere with any of such processes" ; and in the case of a coal mine it has been held that such words may bring its chimney within this section. Such a chimney is privileged by s. 334, but whether it is exempt from prosecution depends on whether the smoke nuisance can be prevented reasonably without obstructing the efficient working of the mine. If it can be prevented without obstructing the efficient working of the mine, then the chimney of a coal mine is just as subject to the operation of this section as any other chimney (Patterson v. Chamber Colliery Co. (1892), 56 J. P. 200 ; 8 T. L. R. 278).

its own smoke ; and any person using any locomotive not so constructed, or not consuming, so far as practicable, its own smoke, is liable to a fine not exceeding five pounds for every day during which such locomotive is used on any highway. In prosecuting a person for unlawfully using a locomotive not consuming, as far as practicable, its own smoke, contrary to s. 30, the burden of proof that it does so consume its smoke lies on the defendant (Pitt-Rivers v. Glassey (1891), 55 J. P. 663 ; 7 T. L. R. 438). The section does not apply to light locomotives and heavy motor cars, if the weight of the car unladen does not exceed five tons or six and a-half tons with an unladen vehicle drawn by it : see the Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896, s. 1 and Sched., the Motor Car Act, 1903, s. 12 (1), and Art. III. of the Heavy Motor Car Order, 1904. The position of one of the last-mentioned vehicles was recently considered under the following circumstances :—The appellants were summoned under s. 30, for using on a highway a locomotive which did not consume so far as practicable its own smoke. The locomotive was a petrol motor-omnibus weighing less than five tons, and had a smokeless engine, but it was seen to emit considerable quantities of smoke which smelt of burnt oil. This was caused by the negligence of the driver in supplying an excessive quantity of lubricating oil to the working parts. The magistrate found, as a fact, that the omnibus was so constructed that no smoke or visible vapour could be emitted therefrom, except by reason of the driver's negligence :—Held, that as the motor-omnibus weighed less than five tons, and was so constructed that no smoke or vapour was emitted therefrom, except from a temporary cause, it was exempted by s. 1 of the Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896, as varied by Art. III. of the Heavy Motor Car Order, 1904, from the operation of s. 30 of the Highways and Locomotives Act, 1878, and that, therefore, the appellants had committed no offence against the section under which they were summoned (Star Omnibus Co. (London), Ltd. v. Tagg (1907), 71 J. P. 352 ; 97 L. T. 481). Cf. also R. v. Wilbraham (1907), 71 J. P. 336 ; 96 L. T. 712 ; but see Hindle v. Noblett (1908), 72 J. P. 26 ; 99 L. T. 26.

of the London Act, for a nuisance caused by the emission of black smoke from emitting
within the meaning of the section (Tough v. Hopkins, [1904] 1 K. B. 804 ; 68 J. P. 274). So too, semble, would be the funnel of a railway engine. As to chimneys of mines, smelting works, etc., see preceding note and Patterson v. Chamber Colliery Co., there cited.

The respondents were summoned for sending forth black smoke on a certain day from a chimney of premises belonging to them (not being the chimney of a private dwelling-house) in such quantity as to be a nuisance within the meaning of the Nuisances Removal Acts (18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, s. 12 ; 23 & 24 Vict. c. 77, s. 13 ; 29 & 30 Vict. c. 90, s. 14). Proof was given that black smoke issued from the chimney on the day named so as to be a nuisance, and that the premises were in the occupation of the respondents, and used as a factory. No evidence was adduced to show that any inquiry had been made to find out who had charge of the furnace causing the smoke at the time of the emission. It was held that the respondents were properly summoned, as the persons by whose permission the nuisance arose, and were responsible as such, if the person causing the smoke to issue was their servant (Barnes v. Akroyd (1872), L. R. 7 Q. B. 474; 37 J. P. 116).

G.'s mill sent forth black smoke for more than ten minutes. The furnace was properly constructed and superintended by efficient firemen, and the stoker's own negligence was the cause of the smoke. G. was summoned for a nuisance within the meaning of s. 91. It was held that the justices were wrong in dismissing the charge, and in holding that G. was not liable (Niven v. Greaves (1890), 54 J. P. 548).

In Barnes v. Norris (1876), L. R. 7 Q. B. 537; 41 J. P. 150, B. charged N. that black smoke issued from certain chimneys on his premises so as to cause a nuisance. There were five separate chimneys together, each used for a separate purpose. N. objected that the summons was bad for not showing from which of the chimneys the smoke was said to issue:—Held, that the justices were wrong in allowing this objection, and that they ought to have heard the evidence and made their order as to one or more of the chimneys. Semble, per CLEASBY, B., that if there were several chimneys together which sent forth smoke, though each might not of itself send forth sufficient to be a nuisance, yet an offence might be committed. See also R. v. Waterhouse, in notes to s. 98, post, p. 183.

(n) As to what is a “private dwelling-house” for the purposes of this section, see Queen Anne's Mansions v. Westminster Corporation (1901), 46 Sol. J. 70. See also McNair v. Baker, [1904] 1 K. B. 208; 68 J. P. 66, where it was held that a west-end London club did not come within the exception of a private dwelling-house in s. 24 (b) of the P. H. (London) A., 1891. The club was composed of 750 members and had for many years occupied premises which had previously been a private dwelling-house. There was, however, the usual accommodation for the members, and a staff of servants resided on the premises.

(o) Smoke need not be injurious to health in order to be a nuisance within this and the following sections (Gaskell v. Bayley (1874), 38 J. P. 293; 30 L. T. 516), nor is it necessary to prove that any particular person or property is injuriously affected by it (South London Electric Supply Corporation v. Perrin, [1901] 2 K. B. 186; 65 J. P. 637).

Common law nuisances by smoke, noise, smell, or vibration.

Smoke, unaccompanied by noise or noxious vapour, noise alone, and offensive odours alone, although not injurious to health, may severally constitute a nuisance, though not one capable of being dealt with summarily under this Act. The material question in all such cases is, whether the annoyance produced is such as materially to interfere with the ordinary comfort of human existence. An injunction was granted to restrain the issuing of smoke and effluvia from a factory chimney and the making of noise in the factory, though it was situated in a manufacturing town, it being proved that such smoke, effluvia and noise were a material addition to previously existing nuisances (Crump v. Lambert (1867), L. R. 3 Eq. 409; affirmed (1867), 17 L. T. 133). See also Saville v. Kilner (1872), 26 L. T. 277 (smoke and vapour from glass works); Lambton v. Mellish, [1894] 3 Ch. 163; 58 J. As to noxious trades, see ss. 112—115, post, p. 208, and s. 51 of the P. H. A., 1907, post, p. 1126.

As to the liability on indictment for causing a nuisance by smoke, see R. v. White (1757), 1 Burr. 333 ; R. v. Dewsnap (1812), 16 East, 194, and the Steam Engine Furnaces Act, 1821 (as to costs and orders for abatement). It is to be observed, however, that a defendant cannot be punished under this Act as well as on indictment or similar proceedings. See ss. 111, 340, 341, post. As to the right of action for damage to property caused by smoke, see St. Helen's Smelting Co. v. Tipping (1865), 11 H. L. Cas. 642.

As to the liability of the owner for a smoke nuisance caused by his tenant, see Rich v. Basterfield, and the remarks thereon in Harris v. James, post, p. 174.

As to the rights of joint owners of a party wall, containing the flues of both houses, if smoke from a fireplace in one house escapes through cracks into the other house, see Jones v. Pritchard, [1908] 1 Ch. 630.

(p) As already stated in note (b), this section does not apply to every nuisance which may be made the subject of indictment or action. The nuisances enumerated in it, however, may be remedied by ordinary legal proceedings as well as under this Act, subject to the proviso in s. 111, post, p. 207, that no person shall be twice punished for the same offence. See also ss. 340, 341, post. Ordinary remedy not excluded.

In the case of coal mines, the Coal Mines Act, 1911, s. 26, and in the case of other mines the Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872, s. 13, contain provisions as to the fencing of abandoned shafts for the prevention of accidents. Shafts not fenced as required by those sections (which differ materially in their wording), may be dealt with as statutory nuisances under the present section (s. 91). The Quarry (Fencing) Act, 1887, contains a similar provision relating to the fencing of quarries. For these provisions, see App. I., post. Other statutory nuisances punishable summarily.

The Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1885, s. 9, post, p. 729, provides that a tent, van, shed, or similar structure, used for human habitation, which is in such a state as to be a nuisance or injurious to health, or which is so overcrowded as to be injurious to the health of the inmates, whether or not members of the same family, shall be deemed to be a nuisance within the meaning of this section, and the provisions of this Act are to apply accordingly. See also Att.-Gen. v. Brown and Att.-Gen. v. Stone, ante, p. 165.

Reference may also be made to the Inclosure Act, 1857, as to nuisances on town and village greens and allotments for exercise and recreation ; and to 34 & 35 Vict. c. 113, and 54 & 55 Vict. c. 76, ss. 2, 48, 49, as to nuisances in the metropolis for want of water.

(q) The penalty here referred to is that which may be enforced by virtue of s. 96, post, p. 179, to which it might have been more appropriate to append this proviso as to trade deposits. Apparently the case must be brought before the court on an information, and the court are not to impose a penalty if they be satisfied as herein mentioned. If, however, the authority are assured that such will be the result, they will be justified in abstaining from fruitless proceedings. See the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, 1848, s. 14, and 1879, s. 39 (2); as to the burden of proof in respect of a proviso, etc. being on the defendant. Proviso as to trade deposits."

(r) This points to the injury outside of the premises.

(s) There is here a material alteration of the L. G. A., 1858, s. 45, and the law is much simplified. The information must, however, be laid, and the court must be satisfied, and if so satisfied must dismiss the complaint. An information was laid against a brewer, for that black smoke was from time to time sent forth from the chimney of his brewery in such quantities as to be a nuisance, and the justices convicted. It was held, on a case stated, that the second proviso in the text applied only to the first part of sub-s. (7), and not to the second part, making it Proviso as to non-consumption of smoke.

an offence to send forth black smoke in such a quantity as to be a nuisance, and that the defendant was not entitled to call evidence as to the construction of the furnace (Weekes v. King (1885), 49 J. P. 709 ; 53 L. T. 51). An attempt was made to question this decision in Ex parte Schofield, [1891] 2 Q. B. 428 ; 56 J. P. 4 ; but the High Court held that they were bound by Weekes v. King, and the Court of Appeal held that the matter being criminal, no appeal lay from that decision.

A local Act incorporated the smoke provisions of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, but contained a similar power to that in the text of remission of the penalties. Where a magistrate found that the only mode by which the emission of smoke complained of could be diminished would render it impossible for the defendant to carry on his business with the furnace he used, which was proved to be properly constructed, the Court of Exchequer held that he had consumed his smoke as far as possible, and was entitled to a remission. These words are not to be construed absolutely, but as signifying "as far as possible, consistent with the carrying on of the trade for which the furnace is used" (Cooper v. Woolley (1867), L. R. 2 Ex. 88 ; 31 J. P. 135. And see the cases in note (l), supra).

inspect district for detection of
nuisances.

92. It shall be the duty (a) of every local authority to cause to be made from time to time inspection of their district (b), with a view to ascertain what nuisances exist calling for abatement under the powers of this Act, and to enforce the provisions of this Act in order to abate the same ; also to enforce the provisions of any Act (c) in force within their district requiring fireplaces and furnaces to consume their own smoke.

Remedy
default.

(a) It will be observed from s. 105 that, apart from action by the local authority, it is open to any person aggrieved to take proceedings for the abatement of nuisances, and for this reason the L. G. B. would probably not consider s. 299 applicable should default on the part of the authority be alleged. Under the L. G. A., 1894, s. 8 (3), a parish council has power to deal with insanitary pools, ditches, and drains, but so as not to interfere with any private right or the sewage or drainage works of any local authority. But nothing in that section is to derogate from any obligation of a district council with respect to the execution of sanitary works.

Entry upon premises.

(b) See s. 102, post, p. 184, as to how this inspection is to be effected. There is no absolute right, in the first instance, of entry into premises for the purpose of this inspection ; if admission be refused an order of justices must be obtained under s. 102. Much misapprehension exists in the minds of some medical officers and inspectors of nuisances on this point. But a great deal of information can be obtained as to the state of the district without compulsory entry into premises. See Vines v. North London Collegiate Schools, Consett U. D. C. v. Crawford, and Wimbledon U. D. C. v. Hastings, cited in the notes to s. 102, post, p. 185. Cf. a similar duty to make inspection of a district under the Housing, Town Planning, etc. Act, 1909, s. 17 (1).

(c) That is, any local Act. The previous section requires smoke to be consumed, but some local Acts contain special provisions on the subject. See the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, s. 108, and Willcocks v. Sands and Chisholm v. Doulton, in note (l) to s. 91, ante, p. 168.

Information of nuisances to local
authority.

93. Information of any nuisance under this Act in the district of any local authority may be given to such local authority by any person aggrieved thereby, or by any two inhabitant householders of such district, or by any officer of such authority, or by the relieving officer, or by any constable or officer of the police force of such district.

The statute does not point out how notices are to be given to or served upon the authority, but generally notices should be in writing and addressed to the authority under their proper title, and served at their office upon their clerk. If the authority appoint any other officer to receive notices for them, the notice may be delivered to him. For forms of notice, see the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 471.

94. On the receipt of any information respecting the existence of a nuisance the local authority shall (a), if satisfied of the existence of a nuisance, serve a notice (b) on the person by whose act default or sufferance the nuisance arises or continues (c), or, if such person cannot be found, on the owner (d) or occupier of the premises on which the nuisance arises, requiring him to abate the same (e) within a time to be specified in the notice, and to execute such works and do such things as may be necessary for that purpose (f) : Provided—

First. That where the nuisance arises from the want or defective construction of any structural convenience, or where there is no occupier of the premises, notice under this section shall be served on the owner (g) :

Secondly. That where the person causing the nuisance cannot be found and it is clear that the nuisance does not arise or continue by the act default or sufferance of the owner or occupier of the premises, the local authority may themselves abate the same without further (h) order.

(a) This word is imperative, and imposes a duty upon the local authority.

(b) See the forms of this notice in Sched. IV., Form A., post, p. 686, and in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 472 ; and as to authentication and service of such notice, see ss. 266, 267, post, p. 590. Observe that the notice must be given by the authority, or at least by their direction ; it cannot be given by an officer on his own initiative. See St. Leonard's, Shoreditch (Vestry of) v. Holmes (1885), 50 J. P. 132.

The public health committee of a metropolitan vestry (duly appointed under s. 58 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855), directed their officer to serve a nuisance notice in respect of a drain, and in case of non-compliance therewith, to issue a summons. After the issue, but before the hearing, of such summons, the vestry approved the committee's acts :—Held, a sufficient approval or ratification to support the summons (Firth v. Staines, [1897] 2 Q. B. 70 ; 61 J. P. 452).

A local authority exercises its discretion where a committee has considered a matter and reported and the report is adopted. See Agnew v. Manchester Corporation, and Bower v. Caistor R. D. C., p. 96, ante.

(c) The owner or occupier is not to be served as such if the person by whose act, default, or sufferance the nuisance arises can be found (Richmond Union v. Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's (1868), 32 J. P. 374 ; 18 L. T. 522). But it is not always easy to decide as between owner and occupier which of them should be treated as liable for the nuisance as the person by whose act, default, or sufferance it has arisen. The following cases may be referred to as indicating the principles which should be followed in deciding the question. If the owner of land erect a building which is a nuisance, or of which the occupation is likely to produce a nuisance, and let the land, he is liable to an indictment for such nuisance being continued or created during the term. He is also liable if he lets a building which requires particular care to prevent the occupation from being a nuisance, and the nuisance occur from want of such care on the part of the tenant. If a party buy a reversion during the tenancy, and the tenant afterwards, during his term, erect a nuisance, the reversioner is not liable for it ; but if such reversioner re-let, allowing the nuisance to continue, he is liable for such continuance. And such purchaser is liable to be indicted for the continuance of the nuisance, if the original reversioner would have been liable, though the purchaser has had no opportunity of putting an end to the tenant's interest or abating the nuisance

Section 94.

(R. v. Peddy (1834), 1 A. & E. 822; 3 L. J. M. C. 119. See also Todd v. Flight (1860), 9 C. B. (N.S.) 377). It would seem to follow that when an owner or reversioner would be liable to be indicted for a nuisance, and is, therefore, to be regarded as the person by whose act, default, or sufferance the nuisance arises or continues, the authority may proceed against him under this part of the section. But, of course, it does not follow that the tenant may not also be a person by whose act, etc. the nuisance arises. Thus, in Russell v. Shenton (1842), 3 Q. B. 449, it was held that the occupier and not the owner was primâ facie liable for damages for a nuisance consisting of defective drains; and the principle thus laid down appears to be of general application, although the proviso in the latter part of this section might possibly apply to the case of drains defective in point of construction. See also per PARKE, B., in Chauntler v. Robinson (1849), 4 Exch., at p. 169. And it has been held that if the lessee of property proceeding by the licence of the lessor performs acts which amount to a nuisance, both of them are liable at law and in equity (White v. Jameson (1874), L. R. 18 Eq. 303; 38 J. P. 694). If, however, the acts which cause a nuisance are executed by a lessee for his own benefit, and not for or by the direction of the owner, it would appear by analogy from a Canadian decision that the owner will not be liable (Kieffer v. Le Séminaire de Québec, [1903] A. C. 85). In Broder v. Saillard (1876), 2 Ch. D. 692, it was held that the occupier of a house is liable for allowing the continuance on his premises of any artificial work which causes an injury to a neighbour, even though it has been put there before he took possession. Broder v. Saillard, supra, was followed in Reinhardt v. Mentasti (1889), 42 Ch. D. 685. And see Tarry v. Ashton (1876), 1 Q. B. D. 314; 40 J. P. 439; Silverton v. Marriott (1888), 52 J. P. 677; 59 L. T. 61. In Gandy v. Jubber (1864), 5 B. & S. 78; (1865), 29 J. P. 645; 9 B. & S. 15, the tenancy was from year to year, and the Court of Queen's Bench held that the landlord might have re-entered at the end of each year, and that he was, therefore, liable for the consequences resulting from an accident caused by a grating in front of the house having been for some years in a defective state. In the Exchequer Chamber this decision was overruled on the ground that it proceeded on a misapprehension of the peculiar relations existing between the landlord and tenant in the case of a tenancy from year to year. Such a tenancy requires something to be done between the landlord and tenant in order to determine the tenancy. The same principle applies to a weekly tenancy. See Bowen v. Anderson, [1894] 1 Q. B. 164; 58 J. P. 213, disapproving a contrary decision in Sandford v. Clarke (1888), 21 Q. B. D. 398; 52 J. P. 773. And see Winter v. Baker (1887), 3 T. L. R. 569. A dictum of LITTLEDALE, J., in R. v. Peddy, supra, to the effect that if a reversioner allows a nuisance to continue after he might have determined the tenancy he is liable, appears to be overruled by Gandy v. Jubber, supra. See also on this point, R. v. Barrett (1862), 32 L. J. M. C. 36; R. v. Stannard (1863), 33 L. J. M. C. 61; 28 J. P. 30. When the nuisance consists of the dangerous condition of the premises demised to the tenant, and the tenant is liable to repair under a covenant, the landlord is not liable in respect of the nuisance, unless he has done some act authorising the continuance of the dangerous state of the premises (Pretty v. Bickmore (1873), L. R. 8 C. P. 401; 37 J. P. 552. And see Nelson v. Liverpool Brewery Co. (1877), 2 C. P. D. 311; Cavalier v. Pope, [1906] A. C. 428; Malone v. Laskey and Another, [1907] 2 K. B. 141; Kennedy v. Bruce, [1907] S. C. 845). This rule applies even when the dangerous condition of the premises existed at the time of the demise, the lessee occupying under an obligation to repair (Gwinnett v. Eamer (1875), L. R. 10 C. P. 658). A. let to B. a field for the purpose of its being worked as a lime quarry. The ordinary way of getting the limestone was by means of blasting, and A. authorised the quarrying of the stone and the erection of lime kilns in the field. A nuisance was caused to the adjoining occupier by the blasting and by the smoke from the kilns, and he brought an action against both A. and B. On demurrer by A., held that he, the landlord, was liable, although the nuisance was actually created by the act of his tenant, for the terms of the demise were an authority from him to B. to create the nuisance, which was, therefore, the necessary consequence of the mode of occupation contemplated in the demise (Harris v. James and Another (1876), 45 L. J. Q. B. 545). The court characterised the previous case of Rich v. Basterfield (1847), 4 C. B. 783, as one of excessive refinement. There

A., the owner of a house with a fireplace and chimney, demised it to a tenant from week to week. The tenant lighted fires, and from the position of the chimney the emission of the smoke was a nuisance to B., the owner of the adjoining house. More than one week elapsed, during which A. did not determine the tenancy. In an action by B. against A. it was held that A. was not liable, as the tenant might by burning coke, or by abstaining from lighting fires, or in some similar way, have used the premises without creating a nuisance. The owner is, of course, liable for the existence of a nuisance consisting of or arising out of the non-repair of premises when he has taken upon himself the duty of repairing (Leslie v. Pounds (1812), 4 Taunt. 649; Payne v. Rogers (1794), 2 H. Bl. 350); or where the lessee is bound by his agreement to do the act which leads to the damage or matter of complaint (Burt v. Victoria Graving Dock Co., Ltd. (1882), 47 L. T. 378), for in this case the lessee resembles an agent of the lessor for the purpose of such act. As to the liability of a landlord for a nuisance caused on the demised premises by damage done without his knowledge by a trespasser, see Barker v. Herbert, on p. 164, ante.

It is submitted that in general the occupier, and not the owner, is the person by whose act, default, or sufferance a nuisance consisting of overcrowding arises; and it has been so decided in Scotland. See Home v. Kelso Local Authority (1876), 3 Coup. 239. And see R. v. Mead, Ex parte Gates, infra.

The foregoing remarks apply only with reference to the question, who is the person to whom notice should or may be given? They do not affect any question of liability as between landlord and tenant; as to which see s. 104, post, p. 186.

Where sheep were penned in pens fixed on a highway by the owner of a market who received tolls in respect thereof, it was held that the droppings left on the site constituted a recurring nuisance which arose from his default, permission, or sufferance, for which he was liable (Draper v. Sperring (1861), 25 J. P. 566; 10 C. B. (N.S.) 113).

But a lord of a manor was held not to be liable in respect of a filthy pond on a manorial common which was managed and regulated by conservators appointed by the copyhold jury and tenants (with the assent of the lord) at the court baron (Richmond Union v. Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's (1868), 32 J. P. 374; 18 L. T. 522).

A harbour company were held to be the person through whose default a nuisance from accumulation of seaweed in the harbour arose or continued (Margate Pier and Harbour Proprietors v. Margate Town Council (1869), 33 J. P. 437; 20 L. T. 564).

Where a chapel was used as a shelter for destitute persons and orders as to the number of persons to be admitted were given by the superintendent of the philanthropic work of the religious association owning the chapel to the caretaker, apparently on his own responsibility:—Held, that the superintendent was the person by whose act, default, or sufferance a nuisance consisting in the overcrowding of the chapel at night arose (R. v. Mead, Ex parte Gates (1895), 64 L. J. M. C. 169; 59 J. P. 150).

B. drained his premises into a barrel drain, which also received the sewage of other premises. This drain passed for about 300 yards under a turnpike road, and thence the sewage was conveyed by an open drain through certain land not belonging to B. and ultimately into an open drain about half a mile from B.'s premises, by the side of a road on land not B.'s. This open drain was a nuisance, the matter from B.'s premises in itself being sufficient to cause a nuisance. On complaint, the justices ordered B. to abate the nuisance by cutting off all communication from his premises to the barrel drain. F. was the owner of six houses let to tenants. He had constructed a drain from the houses under land not his own by leave of the owner, by which the sewage was conveyed into and along a watercourse, and the accumulation at the mouth of the drain was a nuisance. On complaint, the justices ordered F. to abate the nuisance:—Held, that the orders were rightly made on B. and F., for that they were the persons by whose acts respectively the nuisances arose. In proceedings under the Act, the question whether or not the persons against whom the proceedings are taken have a legal right to cause their sewage to flow in the given channel, etc. is immaterial (Brown v. Bussell; Francombe v. Freeman (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 251; 32 J. P.

196). See, however, the observations of MATHEW, J., on Brown v. Bussell in Fordom v. Parsons, ante, p. 50, and see Kirkheaton L. B. v. Beaumont, and Kinson Pottery Co. v. Poole Corporation, ante, p. 30.

Brown v. Bussell, supra, was followed in Wincanton R. D. C. v. Parsons, [1905] 2 K. B. 34; 69 J. P. 242. P. had for some years discharged the sewage from his house into a pipe running alongside a country road. After passing along this pipe for some 260 feet the sewage was discharged into a catchpit, and continued from such catchpit for seventy feet under a highway under the control of a rural district council to a point where it was joined by a drain from another house, and subsequently, after passing through private property, emptied into a stream. The catchpit and pipe therefrom up to the point of junction with the second drain were made by the tenant of other property to prevent surface water from the highway overflowing thereon. The pipe up to the point where it was joined by the second drain carried sewage from P.'s premises only, but from the catchpit onwards it carried off also the surface water from the highway. The authority had never repaired the pipe or treated it as a sewer. The portion of pipe leading from the catchpit had been broken where it passed under the highway at a distance of six feet from the catchpit, and the sewage collected and caused a nuisance. On proceedings against P. as "the person by whose act, default or sufferance the nuisance arose," it was held that it was no defence upon proceedings under s. 94 to show that the pipe was a sewer which the authority were liable to repair. See the observations on this decision at p. 51, supra.

Where there was a flow of sewage from several houses without appreciable damage from any one house, but the accumulation caused a nuisance on other properties, the occupiers of each of the houses were held to be liable (Hendon Union v. Bowles (1869), 34 J. P. 19; 20 L. T. 609). This decision appears to answer a query left undecided in Brown v. Bussell, ante, p. 175. And see Lambton v. Mellish, [1894] 3 Ch. 163; 58 J. P. 835.

The plaintiff and the defendants occupied adjoining houses, and the defendants had the right of sending sewage from their house through a pipe under the plaintiff's house into the main sewer. Twelve feet of this pipe was used solely to convey sewage from the defendants' premises. Proceedings under ss. 4 and 5 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, were taken against the plaintiff for a nuisance arising from the pipe being defective and a magistrates' order was obtained. The plaintiff thereupon did the required repairs to the pipe, including the said portion of twelve feet, and brought an action in the county court to recover contribution under s. 120 (3) of that Act, which provides that when some only of the persons by whose act or default, etc. have been proceeded against, they shall, without prejudice to any other remedy, be entitled to recover in a summary manner from the other persons who were not proceeded against a proportionate part of the costs of and incidental to such proceedings, and abating such nuisance, and of any fines, etc. The county court judge found that there was no evidence to show that the defendants were liable to repair or make good the drain; and he therefore held that the nuisance was not caused by any act or default of the defendants, and gave judgment for them. It was held, on appeal, that, as there was no evidence of any obligation on the defendants to repair any portion of the pipe on the premises occupied by the plaintiff, the decision was right (Nathan v. Rouse, [1905] 1 K. B. 527; 69 J. P. 135). See also Reeve v. Sadler on p. 202, post.

As to the liability of the occupier of a factory or other works for a nuisance arising out of smoke, though the same may be caused by his workmen, see the cases mentioned in note (l) to s. 91, ante, p. 168.

The appellant's landlord made a sewer under land let by him to the appellant without obtaining his consent. Pecuniary compensation was claimed at the time, but for two years the sewage of several houses passed through the sewer. At length the appellant, being unable to get satisfaction, stopped up the sewer, and the local board obtained a conviction against him under the above section and s. 96, post, p. 179, although no nuisance existed on his land:—Held, that the appellant was a person by whose act the nuisance arose or continued, and that he was rightly convicted (Riddell v. Spear (1879), 43 J. P. 317; 40 L. T. 130).

The drainage from a gaol in the township of W., which is outside the borough of L., built there by the corporation of L., and duly declared to be the common gaol of the borough, was carried thence by open drains over land in the township of B. not belonging to the corporation, and caused a nuisance in B. The corporation of L. was thereupon summoned by the nuisance removal committee of B. under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121. It was held that the corporation of L. and not the justices having the management of the gaol were the proper persons to be summoned, and they were ordered to do what was necessary under that Act (Ex parte Mayor, etc. of Liverpool (1857), 27 L. J. M. C. 89 ; 22 J. P. 562).

Note to
Section 94.

When a nuisance is caused by sewage works belonging to a local authority, the authority cannot be proceeded against under this part of the Act as the person by whose act, etc. the nuisance arises (R. v. Parlbay (1889), 22 Q. B. D. 520 ; 53 J. P. 327).

In cases of defective drains a question often arises whether the drain complained of is a drain or a sewer as defined by s. 4. In the latter case the liability is not on the person on whose premises the defect is. See the notes to s. 4, ante, p. 24, and s. 23, ante, p. 82. See also Fordom or Wycombe Union v. Parsons, [1894] 2 Q. B. 780 ; 58 J. P. 765, the facts of which are set out, ante, p. 50. Cf., however, Wincanton R. D. C. v. Parsons, supra. Where, however, a drain has become a sewer by reason of its receiving the drainage of more than one house, yet, as between the local authority and the builder, who on the passing of his plans undertook that the drain should, for all purposes of the Public Health Acts, be a private drain, and that it and a cesspool into which the drainage flowed should be cleansed and maintained by him, the builder will still be the person by whose act or default the nuisance arises if a nuisance exists at the cesspool from the overflowing therefrom of sewage, although third parties might have a right to say that as between them and the authority the drain had vested in the authority as a sewer, and that the authority were liable to abate the nuisance (per CHANNELL, J., in Butt v. Snow (1903), 67 J. P. 454 ; 89 L. T. 302).

An authority which has taken upon itself under s. 42, ante, p. 106, the cleansing of privies belonging to cottage property, but has, after notification of an outbreak of typhoid fever, failed to eradicate fever germs which have penetrated crevices in the brickwork and cause a nuisance, cannot under s. 94 call upon an owner of the property to abate the nuisance by abolishing privies and substituting water-closets (Barnett v. Laskey (1898), 68 L. J. Q. B. 55 ; 63 J. P. 5).

An important sewer belonging to the defendants passed along a lane near a pond ; an overflow pipe for storm water communicated with a watercourse which fed the plaintiff's pond and conveyed sewage from the sewer to the watercourse, thus polluting the pond. The plaintiff recovered damages (Smith and Taylor v. King's Norton R. D. C. (1896), 60 J. P. 521).

(d) See the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 8. A mere rent collector is within that definition, and may be served with notice to abate a nuisance, although arising from structural defects (Broadbent v. Shepherd (1900), 65 J. P. 70 ; 83 L. T. 504). And an order may be made upon him under s. 96, post, p. 179, although he has resigned his post since service of the notice to abate (Broadbent v. Shepherd (No. 2), [1901] 2 K. B. 274 ; 65 J. P. 499). Note that it is only when the person by whose act, etc., the nuisance arises cannot be found, that the notice may be served on the owner or occupier as such. The authority may serve either, subject to the provisos in the latter part of this section. Where the person causing the nuisance cannot be found, the liability of the owner of premises to abate it only arises where it is shown that it continues by his act, default, or sufferance (Thames (Conservators of the River) v. London (Port Sanitary Authority of), [1894] 1 Q. B. 647 ; 58 J. P. 335).

A notice directed to a person officially in charge of a night shelter that "the premises were so overcrowded as to be injurious or dangerous to the health of the inmates," and a summons and order founded upon such notice, are sufficient to convey to the recipient that the nuisance complained of related to the overcrowding of a "house" or "part of a house," as referred to in the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, s. 2 (1) (e). The temporary occupiers of such night shelters are equivalent to "inmates" of such house (R. v. Slade (1896), 65 L. J. M. C. 108 ; 60 J. P. 358).

Note to
Section 94.

In determining upon whom the notice should be served, the authority may have to consider whether it is in the power of the person served to comply with it. Where a nuisance existed on the land of A. which had been caused by B., and B. had no power to enter on A.'s land to abate the nuisance, it was held that he could not be ordered to do so (Scarborough (Mayor of) v. Scarborough R. S. A. (1876), 1 Ex. D. 344; 40 J. P. 726). This case was followed in R. v. Trimble (1877), 41 J. P. 455; 36 L. T. 508, where it was suggested by COCKBURN, C.J., that the order should be made on the owner of the premises where the nuisance exists. But the authority of these cases is seriously shaken by Parker v. Inge (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 584; 51 J. P. 20. In that case an authority served on the owner of premises a notice under this section requiring him to abate a nuisance arising from the defective construction of a structural convenience, and for that purpose to execute certain specified works. Having failed to comply with the notice, the owner was summoned under s. 95, and on the hearing it was proved that the premises in question were occupied by a tenant under a lease for twenty-one years, containing the usual covenants:—Held, that the owner, even although he could not enter upon the premises and execute the works without the tenant's permission, had made default in complying with the requisitions of the notice within the meaning of s. 95, and, therefore, that the justices had jurisdiction to make an order under s. 96, requiring him to abate the nuisance. See also Broadbent v. Shepherd (No. 2), ante, p. 177. The decision in Scarborough (Mayor of) v. Scarborough R. S. A. has, however, been followed in an Irish case (Letterkenny Commissioners v. Collins (1891), 28 L. R. Ir. 235). Cf. also Arlidge v. Islington Borough Council, on p. 161, ante, and Meyrick v. Pembroke Corporation, p. 84, ante.

(f) A notice requiring the abatement of the nuisance forthwith after service thereof, sufficiently specifies the time within which the nuisance must be abated (Thomas v. Western Steam Trawling Co. (1894), 59 J. P. 232). See also Thomas v. Nokes (1868), L. R. 6 Eq. 521.

The authority must, in general, specify in the notice the works which they require to be done. See R. v. Wheatley (1885), 16 Q. B. D. 34; 50 J. P. 424; R. v. Horrocks (1900), 64 J. P. 661; 82 L. T. 767; and cases cited in notes to s. 96, post, p. 179. But a notice to abate a nuisance caused by quantities of black smoke issuing from a factory chimney need not necessarily specify the works required to be done in order to abate the nuisance (Millard v. Wastall, [1898] 1 Q. B. 342; 62 J. P. 135). See also Central London Rail. Co. v. Hammersmith Borough Council (1904), 73 L. J. K. B. 623; 68 J. P. 217; Tough v. Hopkins, [1904] 1 K. B. 804; 68 J. P. 274, cited in the notes to s. 96.

defects.

(g) See Cook v. Montague, ante, p. 8. The owner as distinguished from the occupier is in all cases to abate a nuisance which arises from structural deficiencies or defective construction. The occupier is not liable under the Act for such defects, whatever may be his contractual responsibilities with his landlord. Such responsibilities are not affected by the Act. See s. 104, post, p. 186.

Where notice was served on an occupier, and in the course of the work to abate the nuisance it was found that it was caused by a structural defect, it was held that the occupier could recover the expenses from the owner (Gebhardt v. Saunders, [1892] 2 Q. B. 452; 56 J. P. 741).

(h) This word should have been omitted. In the cases contemplated there has not been any order.

On non-compliance with notice, complaint to be made to justice.

95. If the person on whom a notice to abate a nuisance has been served makes default in complying with any of the requisitions thereof within the time specified, or if the nuisance although abated since the service of the notice is, in the opinion of the local authority, likely to recur (a) on the same premises, the local authority shall (b) cause a complaint (c) relating to such nuisance to be made before a justice (d), and such justice shall thereupon issue a summons (e) requiring the person on whom the notice was served to appear before a court of summary jurisdiction (f). Section 95.

(a) See Draper v. Sperring, ante, p. 175. See also note (a) to the next section.

(b) These words are imperative, and the neglect of the local authority will be a default; as to which see s. 299, post, p. 629.

(c) It does not appear that this complaint must be in writing. See 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 8. But it will be safer for it to be in writing, so as to prevent any dispute in the future by the person in alleged default as to the particular matter complained of. As to the limitation of time, see s. 252, post, p. 556. The time will, of course, in the first place run from the default to which the section applies; but it is not so clear when the matter of complaint arises in the second.

A complaint under this section if preferred maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause will support an action for malicious prosecution against the officer who laid it and the council who directed him to do so (Wiffen v. Bailey and Romford U. D. C., [1914] 2 K. B. 5; 78 J. P. 187).

(d) See as to his competency, s. 258, and the notes thereon.

(e) See the form of the summons in the Sched. IV., Form B. Justices may, in the exercise of their discretion, refuse to issue a summons, even if there be evidence of the offence before them, if they consider that the issue of a summons would be a vexatious and improper proceeding (R. v. Bros (1901), 66 J. P. 54).

(f) See the definition, ante, p. 36.

96. If the court is satisfied that the alleged nuisance exists, or that although abated it is likely to recur (a) on the same premises, the court shall (b) make an order on such person requiring him to comply with all or any of the requisitions of the notice, or otherwise to abate the nuisance within a time specified in the order, and to do any works necessary for that purpose (c); or an order prohibiting the recurrence of the nuisance and directing the execution of any works necessary to prevent the recurrence (d); or an order both requiring abatement and prohibiting the recurrence of the nuisance.

Power of court of summary jurisdiction to make order dealing with nuisance.

The court may by their order impose a penalty not exceeding five pounds on the person on whom the order is made (e), and shall also give directions (f) as to the payment of all costs incurred up to the time of the hearing or making the order for abatement or prohibition of the nuisance.

(a) Upon the summons mentioned in the last section, the court may make an order as provided in this section. In Barnes v. Ackroyd, ante, p. 170, BLACKBURN, J., said that the justices had stopped too soon in their investigation, for after first ascertaining whether a nuisance had been proved to exist, they should have proceeded further to inquire if such nuisance were likely to recur.

(b) This is imperative; still, if the defendant undertake to abate the nuisance, it is presumed that the court may adjourn the case to observe the result of the undertaking.

As to the appearance of the local authority in court, see s. 259, post, p. 577.

(c) The form of order is given in Sched. IV., Form C., post, p. 687. It must be signed by two justices (Wing v. Epsom U. D. C., [1904] 1 K. B. 798; 68 J. P. 259). In R. v. Down JJ., [1905] 2 I. R. 648, it was held that when justices make an order for the abatement of a nuisance, under s. 112 of the P. H. (Ireland) A., 1878, the order of the justices is not the entry in the order book, but the document drawn up in accordance with Form C. in Sched. (C.) of the Act, and that if the order so drawn up is good in form, its validity is not affected by the fact that the entry in the order book would be bad on its face as an order. The point was also raised, but not decided, whether, when such an order is made by more than two justices, all must sign it or whether signature by two justices is sufficient. In R. v. Londonderry JJ., [1910] 2 I. R. 458, three out of five justices decided to make an abatement order. An order, drawn up several days later, was signed by one member of the majority and one member of the minority. Upon a rule being obtained to quash it, the other two members of the majority signed it:—Held (1) that the order required signature by a majority of the adjudicating justices, but (2) that the omission did not go to jurisdiction, and could be corrected afterwards, and (3) that the delay in signing and completing the order did not warrant the issue of a certiorari.

Specification

In Ex parte Whitchurch (1881), 6 Q. B. D. 545 ; 45 J. P. 392, a privy and ashpit being a nuisance, notice was given to abate it, and for that purpose to fill up the ashpit, abandon the privy, and build a pail closet. On default justices made an order under this section in the terms of the notice. The court quashed the order on the ground that the owner could not be compelled to put up a particular kind of closet. STEPHEN, J., said that the question turned upon the word necessary, which could not be extended to mean what the authority thought necessary. But in Ex parte Saunders (1883), 11 Q. B. D. 191 ; 47 J. P. 404, a water-closet in the centre of a house being a nuisance, the authority gave notice to the owner to abate the nuisance, and for that purpose to remove the closet from the centre of the house, and place it near an outer wall, where there might be efficient ventilation, and to fix the soil-pipe outside the wall. The owner having made default, an order was made under this section to do the things specified. It was held that the justices had jurisdiction to make the order. The court (CAVE and A. L. SMITH, JJ.) intimated that Ex parte Whitchurch was distinguishable, on the ground that the order was not for the erection of a particular kind of closet where none existed before, but for the removal of a closet to a place where it would not be a nuisance. In R. v. Llewellyn (1884), 13 Q. B. D. 681 ; 49 J. P. 151, a privy openly discharged night soil and offensive matter on the bank of a river. The sanitary authority served on the owner of the premises notice to abate the nuisance, and for that purpose to “remove the present pipes and pan, level the floor under the seat of the privy, and provide a galvanised double-handled pail under the seat, the cover of the said seat to be movable, so that the said premises should no longer be a nuisance or injurious to health.” The justices made an order in the terms of the notice, and it was held they had jurisdiction to do so. The court adopted the decision in Ex parte Saunders, saying that if it differed from Ex parte Whitchurch they differed also. After this decision it was clear that the cases were in conflict ; and accordingly when the point again arose it was ordered to be argued before three judges. It appeared that an order had been made requiring the appellant, inter alia, to lay down a six-inch glazed stoneware drain pipe, and to connect it with the main sewer in front of his house. FIELD, MANISTY and WILLS, JJ., held that there was jurisdiction to make the order, and overruled Ex parte Whitchurch (R. v. Kent JJ. (1885), 55 L. J. M. C. 9 ; 49 J. P. 404). In Whitaker v. Derby Urban Sanitary Authority (1885), 55 L. J. M. C. 8 ; 50 J. P. 357, the respondents served on the owner of houses to which were attached privies and ashpits, which were a nuisance, a notice requiring him to abate the nuisance, and “for that purpose to deodorise and fill in the privies, privy vaults and ashpits, convert the same to proper pan water-closets, and connect them with the main sewer.” This notice was not complied with, and an order was thereupon made by justices in the terms of the notice. It was held that the order was good, as the above section left it absolutely to the justices to order any works or structural alterations which they in their discretion might think necessary for the abatement of the nuisance. In R. v. Wheatley (1885), 16 Q. B. D. 34 ; 50 J. P. 424, an order of justices requiring the owner of premises to abate a nuisance arising from untrapped drains, and “to execute such works and do such things as may be necessary for that purpose, so that the same shall no longer be a nuisance or injurious to health,” was held bad, because it did not specify what works and things the owner should execute and do for the purpose of abating the nuisance. This case was followed in R. v. Meath JJ. (1899), 34 Ir. L. T. 47. An order of justices “to take such steps as may be necessary to abate a nuisance arising from an accumulation of slaughter-house offal and filth in fields, so that the same shall no longer be a nuisance or injurious to health," was held bad as to the part which dealt with the abatement of the nuisance, as it did not specify the work necessary, but good as to the part which prohibited the recurrence of the nuisance, as in preventing such recurrence there was no necessity to do any work at all (R. v. Horrocks (1900), 69 L. J. Q. B. 688 ; 64 J. P. 661). A notice to abate a nuisance caused by quantities of black smoke issuing from a factory chimney need not necessarily specify the works required to be done in order to abate the nuisance (Millard v. Wastall, [1898] 1 Q. B. 342 ; 62 J. P. 135). This case was followed in a case under the P. H. (London) A., 1891 (Central London Rail. Co. v. Hammersmith Borough Council (1904), 73 L. J. K. B. 623 ; 68 J. P. 217). Under s. 5 (5) of the London Act it is provided that "an abatement order or prohibition order shall, if the person on whom the order is made so requires, or the court considers it desirable, specify the works to be executed by such person for the purpose of abating or preventing the recurrence of the nuisance," but notwithstanding this provision and that a request to specify works has been made, it has been held that it is not necessary for the justices to specify the works in an abatement or prohibition order when the nuisance complained of is one arising from black smoke, if there is no necessity for works in order to prevent the nuisance, e.g., if the only remedy be proper stoking (Central London Rail. Co. v. Hammersmith Borough Council, supra ; Tough v. Hopkins, [1904] 1 K. B. 804 ; 68 J. P. 274).

An order may be good as to the prohibition, though bad as to the abatement. See Severability Scarborough (Mayor of) v. Scarborough R. S. A., ante, p. 178, R. v. Horrocks, supra. of order.

An order made under this section is an order made in a criminal cause or matter Appeal within the meaning of the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 47, and when the King's Bench Division has granted a certiorari to quash the order, an appeal will not lie to the Court of Appeal (R. v. Whitchurch (1881), 7 Q. B. D. 534 ; 45 J. P. 617). In another case, upon a complaint as to a factory chimney sending forth black smoke, so as to be a nuisance within s. 91 (7), the magistrate convicted, and refused to state a case. The High Court, having refused to grant a rule to the magistrate to state a case, it was held that the proceedings were criminal, and that no appeal lay to the Court of Appeal (Ex parte Schofield, [1891] 2 Q. B. 428 ; 56 J. P. 4), and see R. v. D'Eyncourt (1901), 18 T. L. R. 53.

An order of justices under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, s. 13, was without appeal to the quarter sessions (Ex parte Corporation of Liverpool (1857), 22 J. P. 562 ; 8 El. & Bl. 537) ; but now s. 269, post, p. 595, allows of an appeal to sessions, and s. 99, post, p. 184, suspends proceedings in that event.

A court of summary jurisdiction made an order under this section, upon an owner of premises to comply with a notice served upon him by the authority requiring him to abate a nuisance. Quarter sessions dismissed an appeal against the order, but stated a case. The High Court ordered that the order of quarter sessions should be quashed, and instead thereof judgment entered for the owner, and that the authority should pay to the owner the costs of the two appeals. These costs were taxed, and paid to the owner by the authority. The expenses incurred by the owner in prosecuting the appeals exceeded the costs so paid to him. All the expenses incurred by the owner throughout the proceedings were reasonably and properly incurred :—Held, that the owner's expenses of the proceedings in the court of summary jurisdiction, and the difference between his costs taxed as between party and party and his actual expenses of the two appeals, were not damage for which he was entitled to compensation under s. 308, post, p. 638 (Barnett v. Eccles (Mayor, etc. of), [1900] 2 Q. B. 423 ; 64 J. P. 692).

(e) It is to be noticed that the form in the schedule does not provide for this Penalty dis- Penalty is new, and the imposition of the penalty is discretionary. cretionary.

It is not quite clear whether this penalty is for the previous nuisance, or for disobedience of the notice of the authority. It cannot be for disobedience of the justices' order, for that was not then made. It seems, however, if the two sections, 95 and 96, be read together, that the penalty is for non-compliance with the notice, inasmuch as complaint cannot be made to the justices until the person served with notice is in default.

Appellants, acting under the corresponding section (s. 4) of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, gave notice to the respondent in March, 1904, forthwith to abate, and within the like period to prevent the recurrence of, a nuisance consisting of black smoke issuing from the chimney of a bakehouse. No further nuisance was observed till January, 1906, when the chimney was seen to send forth black smoke in such a quantity as to be a nuisance. The appellants thereupon summoned the respondent for making default in complying with the notice of March, 1904. The magistrate found upon the evidence that immediately on receipt of the notice the nuisance was abated, and that the matter now complained of was a separate and independent occurrence, and he dismissed the summons:—Held, that it was open to the magistrate to find that the two occurrences were not connected with one another, and that his decision must stand (Battersea Borough Council v. Goerg (1906), 71 J. P. 11; 5 L. G. R. 62). For a similar decision where the interval was six months, see Greenwich Borough Council v. London C. C. (1912), 76 J. P. 267; 106 L. T. 887.

Note to

No penalty can be imposed in cases coming within the first proviso to s. 91, ante, p. 162.

Costs.

(f) It is presumed that this must be by an order, but the form in the schedule does not provide for these costs. It has been held in Ireland under similar sections that the justices must determine the amount of costs “reasonably” incurred, and have no discretion to award a less sum (Mullingar R. D. C. v. Greville (1906), 41 Ir. L. T. 144).

prohibition in case of house unfit for human habitation.

97. Where the nuisance proved to exist is such as to render a house or building, in the judgment of the court, unfit for human habitation, the court may prohibit the using thereof for that purpose until, in its judgment, the house or building is rendered fit for that purpose; and on the court (a) being satisfied that it has been rendered fit (b) for that purpose the court may determine its previous order by another, declaring the house or building habitable, and from the date thereof such house or building may be let or inhabited.

(a) By the use of this word the difficulty in 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, s. 13, is avoided. It is not now necessary that the same justices should act. The statute does not indicate any mode of procedure. Presumably an application is to be made to the court, and previous notice should be sent to the authority.

(b) See the provisions in s. 157, post, p. 324, as to byelaws regarding houses unfit for human habitation. Such byelaws are restricted to houses erected within the period specified, but this section applies to ancient as well as modern houses.

See also the provisions of the Housing, Town Planning, etc. Act, 1909, ss. 17—21, post, p. 1166, as to the closing and demolition of premises which are in a state so dangerous or injurious to health as to be unfit for human habitation.

Penalty for contraven-
of court.

98. Any person not obeying an order to comply with the requisitions of the local authority or otherwise to abate the nuisance, shall, if he fails to satisfy the court that he has used all due diligence to carry out such order, be liable to a penalty not exceeding ten shillings per day during his default (a); and any person knowingly and wilfully acting contrary to an order of prohibition shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding twenty shillings per day during such contrary action; moreover, the local authority may (b) enter the premises to which any order relates, and abate the nuisance, and do whatever may be necessary in execution of such order, and recover in a summary manner (c) the expenses incurred by them from the person on whom the order is made.

against abatement
and

(a) Upon an information against H. for a nuisance arising through a chimney sending forth black smoke, an order was made on July 20th, 1868, that within two months he should make such alterations in the said chimney as to consume the smoke arising therefrom. He thereupon made certain alterations, and black smoke ceased to issue until the 4th of the following February, when for a certain limited period on that day and the following days it again issued. In the following July an information was laid for disobedience of the order. No evidence was given as to the cause of the issuing of the smoke, and the justices convicted H. :—Held, first, that there was evidence justifying the conviction; and, secondly, that as the nuisance was a continuing one, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 11, did not apply (Higgins v. Northwich Union (1870), 34 J. P. 806; 22 L. T. 752; see, however, Battersea Borough Council v. Goerg, and Greenwich Borough Council v. London C. C., ante, p. 182). But s. 11 applies to this extent, viz.: penalties in respect of a continuing offence cannot be imposed for a greater period than six months prior to the issue of the summons for the recovery thereof (R. v. Slade, [1895] 2 Q. B. 247; 59 J. P. 471). A conviction which inflicts future daily penalties is bad; but that part of a conviction can be separated from the rest of the conviction (Mayor, etc. of Scarborough v. Scarborough R. S. A. (1876), 1 Ex. D. 344; 40 J. P. 726; Chepstow Electric Light, etc. Co. v. Chepstow Gas, etc. Co., [1905] 1 K. B. 198; 69 J. P. 72).

When an abatement order was persistently disregarded, nineteen separate informations were laid, and the same number of summonses issued in respect of as many acts of disobedience, each committed on a different day, by sending forth black smoke. At the hearing, the full penalty of 10s. was imposed for the offence alleged in each summons, and the offenders were also ordered to pay 15s. costs on the first summons, and 16s. costs upon every other. They objected that their disobedience was but one default, and that the divers acts complained of should have been charged in a single summons, to which only one set of costs would have attached; and they obtained a rule calling on the justices to state a case :—Held, that each daily emission of smoke was a separate act of disobedience, for which a separate summons might be lawfully issued, and that under the circumstances the justices had not so exercised their discretion in awarding costs as to render the interference of the court necessary (R. v. Waterhouse (1872), L. R. 7 Q. B. 545; 36 J. P. 471).

Black smoke having issued from a chimney in such quantities as to be a nuisance, an abatement order was made. Subsequently, black smoke having again issued from the chimney, an order was made prohibiting the recurrence of the nuisance. Two informations having been laid, one in respect of each order, but both founded on the same emission of smoke :—Held, that the act complained of being the same in each case, there could not be two convictions in respect of it (Eddleston v. Barnes (1875), 1 Ex. D. 67; 40 J. P. 88).

It would seem from Parker v. Inge, ante, p. 178, that an owner ordered to abate a nuisance would not be liable to a penalty if he proved that he had no power to enter upon the lands where the nuisance was, and had been refused admission. As to whether under such circumstances the order should be made upon him at all, see also the other decisions there cited.

Justices made an order on P. to cleanse a drain; P. did not obey the order and the local board refused to take any steps to enforce it :—Held, that the party aggrieved was not entitled to a mandamus to the local board to compel them to abate the nuisance under the corresponding provisions of the Nuisances Removal Act, 1855, s. 14 (Ex parte Bassett; In re West Ham L. B. (1857), 21 J. P. 85; 7 El. & Bl. 280). This case was decided, however, before the passing of the Sanitary Act, 1866, s. 49 of which appears in this Act as s. 299, and provides for default by a sanitary authority in enforcing the provisions of this Act. And see also the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1885, s. 7, post, p. 729, which provides that it shall be the duty of every local authority to put in force from time to time, as occasion may arise, the powers with which they are invested, so as to procure the proper sanitary condition of all premises within the area under their control.

(b) Although this clause gives a right of entry upon default, yet, if admission be refused, a justices' order under s. 102, p. 184, post, will apparently be necessary. When an order was made under the corresponding provisions of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, upon an owner to abate a nuisance, and, in his default, upon the local authority, he was held liable to the penalty for default, though the authority failed to act under the order (Tomlins v. Nuisance Removal Company of Great Stanmore (1865), 29 J. P. 117 ; 12 L. T. 118).

(c) See s. 251, post, p. 550, and note (e) to s. 21, ante, p. 80.

against

99. Where any person appeals against an order to the court of quarter sessions in manner provided by this Act (a) no liability to penalty shall arise, nor shall any proceedings be taken or work be done under such order, until after the determination of such appeal, unless such appeal ceases to be prosecuted (b).

(a) See s. 269, post, p. 595.

(b) It may be difficult in some cases to decide when this time has arrived.

In certain cases order may be addressed
to local
authority.

100. Whenever it appears to the satisfaction of the court of summary jurisdiction that the person by whose act or default the nuisance arises, or the owner or occupier of the premises is not known or cannot be found, then the order of the court may be addressed to and executed by the local authority.

See the form of the order in Sched. IV., Form D., post, p. 688.

The proviso at the end of s. 94, ante, p. 173, applies only where the person causing the nuisance cannot be found, and it is clear that the owner and occupier are not responsible. In that case no order is necessary. But when neither the person causing the nuisance, nor the owner nor the occupier can be found, then an order may be made on the authority under this section.

Power to sell

101. Any matter or thing removed by the local authority in abating any nuisance under this Act may be sold by public auction ; and the money arising from the sale may be retained by the local authority, and applied in payment of the expenses incurred by them with reference to such nuisance, and the surplus (if any) shall be paid, on demand, to the owner of such matter or thing.

See also s. 49, ante, p. 116, where, however, a sale by public auction is not required. Sale by auction can hardly be necessary in most of these cases. It is to be noticed that this section applies only to matters or things removed by the local authority in abating a nuisance.

authority.

102. The local authority, or any of their officers, shall (a) be admitted into any premises (b) for the purpose of examining as to the existence of any nuisance thereon (c), or of enforcing the provisions of any Act (d) in force within the district requiring fireplaces and furnaces to consume their own smoke, at any time between the hours of nine in the forenoon and six in the afternoon, or in the case of a nuisance arising in respect of any business, then at any hour when such business is in progress or is usually carried on.

Where under this Act a nuisance has been ascertained to exist or an order of abatement or prohibition has been made (e), the local authority or any of their officers shall (f) be admitted from time to time into the premises between the hours aforesaid, until the nuisance is abated, or the works ordered to be done are completed, as the case may be.

Where an order of abatement or prohibition has not been complied with, or has been infringed, the local authority, or any of their officers, shall (f) be admitted from time to time at all reasonable hours, or at all hours during which business is in progress or is usually carried on, into the premises where the nuisance exists, in order to abate the same (g). Section 102.

If admission to premises for any of the purposes of this section is refused, any justice on complaint thereof on oath (h) by any officer of the local authority (made after reasonable notice in writing of the intention to make the same has been given (i) to the person having custody of the premises), may, by order under his hand, require the person having custody of the premises to admit the local authority, or their officer, into the premises during the hours aforesaid, and if no person having custody of the premises can be found, the justice shall, on oath (h) made before him of that fact, by order under his hand authorise the local authority or any of their officers to enter such premises during the hours aforesaid.

Any order made by a justice for admission of the local authority or any of their officers on premises shall continue in force until the nuisance has been abated, or the work for which the entry was necessary has been done.

(a) The section is very wide in regard to the officers, no particular officer being referred to ; but as none can enter compulsorily against the will of the occupier, without an order of justices, this point will be cleared up by such order. The authority being a corporate body cannot enter of themselves, and should, therefore, depute this function. Members or officers so deputed must not enter premises without obtaining the permission of the occupier or without an order of a justice, if permission has been refused. If they do so enter, and the occupier interferes with them whilst they are upon the premises, no offence will be committed by him under s. 306, post, p. 637 (Cousett U. D. C. v. Crawford, [1903] 2 K. B. 183 ; 67 J. P. 309).

(b) As to entry into tents, vans, sheds, or similar structures used for human habitation, see the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1885, s. 9, post, p. 729. Other powers of entry.

(c) The same right, for the purpose of enforcing orders and regulations as to dairies, cowsheds, and milkshops, is given by the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, 1886, s. 9 (4), post, p. 732 ; and for the inspection of water supply in rural districts by the Public Health (Water) Act, 1878, s. 7, post, p. 705.

(d) Local Acts in many instances contain such a provision.

(e) Under s. 96, ante, p. 179.

(f) See note (a).

(g) The previous paragraph relates to the mere inspection ; this to the action of the local authority under the order. See further ss. 105, 106, post, p. 202.

(h) By 52 & 53 Vict. c. 63, s. 3, in all Acts of Parliament passed after 1850, the Oath. expression "oath" includes, in the case of persons for the time being allowed by law to affirm or declare instead of swearing, affirmation and declaration. As to persons entitled to affirm and the circumstances under which they may do so, see the Oaths Act, 1888, and R. v. Moore (1892), 61 L. J. M. C. 80 ; 56 J. P. 345 ; Nash v. Nawab Mahmood Ali Khan, Times, March 18th, 1892.

A sanitary inspector who applies for a warrant under s. 115 of the P. H. Grounds of (London) A., 1891, authorising him to enter premises to which he has been refused admission, must show to the magistrate some reasonable ground for such entry. Merely to show that in seeking admission to premises he is acting honestly with a view to the discharge of his duties, will not suffice (Vines v. North London Collegiate School (1899), 63 J. P. 244). A magistrate, although he has not to decide the question of the existence of the alleged nuisance, may consider whether there are reasonable grounds for suspecting the existence of a nuisance, and receive evidence for that purpose (Wimbledon U. D. C. v. Hastings (1902), 67 J. P. 45 ; Note to Section 102. 87 L. T. 118). If an order is made it should state that it is in reference to a particular subject-matter (ibid.).

Notice of complaint.

(i) These words seem to imply personal delivery to the custodian of the premises. For a form of notice, see the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 473. There is no provision in respect of empty or unoccupied premises, because there can be no refusal of admission. It is by no means clear whether admission can be forced in respect of such premises, and yet the necessity of the case may often require it.

Penalty for disobedience of order.

103. Any person who refuses to obey an order of a justice for admission of the local authority or any of their officers on any premises shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds.

See s. 251, post, p. 550, as to the recovery of such penalty.

Costs and expenses of execution of provisions relating to nuisances.

104. All reasonable costs and expenses incurred in making a complaint, or giving notice, or in obtaining any order of the court or any justice in relation to a nuisance under this Act, or in carrying the same into effect, shall be deemed to be money paid for the use and at the request of the person on whom the order is made (a); or if the order is made on the local authority, or if no order is made, but the nuisance is proved (b) to have existed when the complaint was made or the notice given, then of the person by whose act or default the nuisance was caused; and in case of nuisances caused by the act or default of the owner (c) of premises, such costs and expenses may be recovered from any person who is for the time being owner (c) of such premises: Provided that such costs and expenses shall not exceed in the whole one year's rack-rent (d) of the premises.

Such costs and expenses, and any penalties incurred in relation to any such nuisance, may be recovered in a summary manner (e) or in any county (f) or superior court; and the court shall have power to divide costs expenses and penalties between persons by whose acts or defaults a nuisance is caused as to it may seem just (g).

Any costs and expenses recoverable under this section by a local authority from an owner of premises may be recovered from the occupier for the time being of such premises (h); and the owner shall allow such occupier to deduct any moneys which he pays under this enactment out of the rent from time to time becoming due in respect of the said premises, as if the same had been actually paid to such owner as part of such rent (i):

Provided, that no such occupier shall be required to pay any further sum than the amount of rent for the time being due from him, or which, after demand (k) of such costs or expenses from such occupier, and after notice (k) not to pay his landlord any rent without first deducting the amount of such costs or expenses, becomes payable by such occupier, unless he refuses, on application to him by the local authority, truly to disclose the amount of his rent and the name and address of the person to whom such rent is payable; but the burden of proof that the sum demanded from any such occupier is greater than the rent due by him at the time of such notice, or which has since accrued, shall lie on such occupier:

Provided also, that nothing herein contained shall affect any contract between any owner or (sic) occupier of any house building or other property whereby it is or may be agreed that the occupier shall pay or discharge all rates dues and sums of money payable in respect of such house building or other property, or to affect any contract whatsoever between landlord and tenant (l). Section 104.

(a) As the local authority will have paid the money, they will apparently be the proper plaintiffs. See also the provision as to costs in s. 96, ante, p. 179.

(b) This proof must be given in the action or in the summary proceedings.

(c) See the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 8. The words "for the time being owner," seem to have been inserted in order to avoid the effect of Blything Union (Guardians of) v. Warton (1863), 27 J. P. 87; 3 B. & S. 352, decided with reference to 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, s. 19.

Questions frequently arise as to the ultimate incidence of the cost of drainage and paving work done on settled estates. Where trustees have the legal estate in premises, and are entitled for the time being to receive the "rack-rents" thereof, they are "owners" within the meaning of s. 4. See In re Barney, Harrison v. Barney, [1894] 3 Ch. 562; In re Lever, Cordwell v. Lever, [1897] 1 Ch. 32. But when trustees are "owners" and have executed works, the question as to who must ultimately bear the expense is not easy to determine. In In re Barney, supra, trustees incurred expenses for drainage works in respect of houses which were without sufficient drains. It was held that they had rightly paid the expenses out of capital, and that as between the tenant for life and remainderman the capital moneys so applied must be treated as a charge upon the premises. Cf., however, In re Crawley, cited on p. 192, post, which is apparently at variance with In re Barney, supra. In In re Lever, supra, where sanitary works were executed under the P. H. (London) A., 1891, upon leasehold houses forming part of a residuary bequest to trustees upon trust for tenant for life and remainderman, it was again held that the cost was payable out of the capital of the residuary estate. A later case would at first sight appear to decide that as between tenant for life and remainderman the cost of complying with a sanitary notice under the P. H. (London) A., 1891, and the Housing of the Working Classes Acts, and a dangerous structure notice under the London Building Act, 1894, was chargeable as against income. See In re Copland's Settlement, Johns v. Carden, [1900] 1 Ch. 326. If, however, the case is carefully examined it will be seen that the only point decided was that there is no distinction in the position of an equitable tenant for life of leaseholds when the property is sublet at a rack-rent, and when it is sublet at an improved ground rent. It was admitted that the income would be chargeable had not the property been sublet at an improved ground rent. It will be seen from the judgment that the superior lease made the tenant liable to pay for complying with the notices in question, and this perhaps distinguishes the case from In re Lever, supra. The general rule would appear to be that where works have been executed under a notice from a sanitary authority, and the trustees (or the life tenant who has arranged with them to provide the money required) apply to the court to be indemnified out of the estate, it is competent to the court to determine how the expense shall be borne, having regard to the permanent or temporary nature of the work done (In re Farnham's Settlement, [1904] 2 Ch. 561; and cf. In re Thomas, Weatherall v. Thomas, [1900] 1 Ch. 319; In re Partington, Leigh v. Kane, [1902] 1 Ch. 711).

A legal or equitable tenant for life in possession would appear to be the "owner" (Re Smith's Settled Estates, [1901] 1 Ch. 689), and, if such a tenant for life pays expenses which have been incurred by an authority, and which constitute a charge upon property by virtue of s. 257, he is entitled to keep the charge alive as an incumbrance on the settled land, and to raise money under s. 11 of the Settled Land Act, 1890, by mortgage of the estate for the purpose of discharging it (ibid.). See also In re Pizzi, Scrivener and Others v. Aldridge and Others, [1907] 1 Ch. 67; 71 J. P. 58, decided under the Private Street Works Act, 1892. In another case expenses incurred by an authority in sewerage, paving, and flagging new streets on settled land were charged on the land and made payable, with interest thereon, by instalments. It was held that the expenses so charged were payable out of capital moneys under s. 21 (ii) of the Settled Land Act, 1882; and that the tenant for life was entitled to repayment of instalments already paid

tenants for life and re-maindermen.

Note to

by him so far as they represented capital, and that the trustees ought to pay the corresponding portion of the unpaid instalments (In re Leigh's Settled Estate, [1902] 2 Ch. 274; 66 J. P. 600).

When an equitable tenant for life, by arrangement with the trustees, executes sanitary works he is entitled by subrogation to the rights of the trustees (In re Farnham's Settlement, supra).

(d) See the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 15.

(e) See s. 251, post, p. 550. The money, if sought to be recovered summarily, will be a civil debt within the meaning of the S. J. A., 1879, ss. 6, 35.

Jurisdiction
of county
court.

(f) See also s. 261, post, p. 578. It was held upon the corresponding section (s. 3) of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 123, that whatever may have been the amount of the costs, and although a question of title to the land on which the nuisance existed arose, the county court had jurisdiction by the express terms of the Act (R. v. Harden (1854), 2 El. & Bl. 188; Hertford Union (Guardians of) v. Kimpton (1855), 11 Ex. 295; 19 J. P. 678). But that Act provided for the recovery of the costs and expenses in any county court, or before two justices. No reference was made to a superior court as in the text; and it is submitted that while a remedy is provided by this section for the recovery of costs, etc. to any amount, in a summary manner, the county court can only be resorted to when the amount is within its jurisdiction.

(g) Apparently this must be done at the risk of the complainants, for if the costs and expenses be divided, some of the defendants may be unable to pay their shares, and there would then, as it seems, be no recourse to the others. Hence the complainants should be heard before the order is made in this form.

Remedy

(h) In Bermondsey (Vestry of) v. Ramsey (1871), L. R. 6 C. P. 247; 35 J. P. 567, it was held with respect to a similar clause in 25 & 26 Vict. c. 102, s. 36, that an unsatisfied judgment against the owner for paying expenses was no bar to an action for the same expenses against the occupier. So also as to proceedings against a subsequent owner, Plumstead Board of Works v. Ingoldby (1873), L. R. 8 Ex. 63, 174; 37 J. P. 759, and cases cited in the notes to s. 257, post, p. 566. The text applies only to costs and expenses which the authority are entitled to recover from the owner under the preceding sections. Therefore, expenditure by a tenant in abating a structural nuisance pursuant to a magistrate's order after notice to abate served on the tenant only cannot be set off against rent due to the landlord (Butcher v. Ruth (1887), 22 L. R. Ir. 380).

(i) Under a similar section with a similar proviso (s. 96 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862) it has been held that where a tenant has covenanted with his landlord to bear expenses (similar to those referred to in s. 104, supra), he has no right to deduct from his rent the amount of such expenses after they have been paid by him, and that the landlord's right to distrain for unpaid rent is not affected (Skinner v. Hunt, [1904] 2 K. B. 452; 68 J. P. 402). It has also been held that in order to entitle an occupier to avail himself of the provision, the money must have been actually paid; and consequently that a distress for rent accrued due after a notice under that section levied before payment to the vestry which gave the notice was not illegal (Ryan v. Thompson (1868), L. R. 3 C. P. 144; 32 J. P. 135).

(k) The authority must make this demand and give the notice. As to authentication and service of such notice, see ss. 266, 267, post, p. 590. For forms of demand and notice, see the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 475.

(l) See also notes to s. 226, post, p. 505.

It frequently happens that statutes which impose a burden primarily upon the owner of premises, contain express provisions enabling landlords and tenants to agree between themselves that the burden shall ultimately fall on the latter. Such burdens sometimes take the form of an obligation on an owner to pay money to a local authority in respect of work done for the benefit of premises, e.g., paving work under the Metropolis Management Acts, 1855 and 1862, and under the Private Street Works Act, 1892. In other cases the duty is cast upon the owner of doing the work himself, but on his default the authority may carry out the work and charge him with the cost, e.g., work done in the abatement of nuisances caused by structural defects under ss. 94—98 of the P. H. A., 1875, or ss. 4 and 5 of the P. H. (London) A., 1891, and paving work done under s. 150 of the P. H. A., 1875. Section 104, supra, expressly provides for the making of agreements as to who shall ultimately bear expenses incurred for the abatement of nuisances under this Act, and a similar provision is contained in s. 121 of the P. H. (London) A., 1891. Section 226, post, p. 505, also preserves the rights of landlords and tenants to agree as to rates made under Part VI. of this Act.

Note to Section 104.

Owners of premises have, not unnaturally, tried to so frame covenants in leases granted by them as to cast upon the lessees the burden of whatever expenses have to be met in respect of the demised premises. In so far as such expenses represent permanent improvements of which they will not get the full benefit, tenants have, quite naturally, sought to escape payment. The result has been that a large number of cases turning upon the construction of covenants as to rates, etc., have come before the courts. The principle of law underlying the cases is the same whether the expenses are those of the nature referred to in s. 104, supra, or are expenses in connection with paving, etc., and the decisions on both points are therefore collected in this note.

Incidence of cost as between landlord and tenant.

Prior to the decision of the Court of Appeal in Foulger v. Arding, post, p. 196, the authorities on the subject were in an unsatisfactory condition, and even now, although many cases decided since Foulger v. Arding, post, have further cleared the air, it cannot be said that the law is clear. It will, however, probably be found that the authorities warrant the following propositions: (1) prima facie a covenant which merely throws "rates, taxes and assessments" upon a tenant, imposes upon him a liability to pay only assessments of a temporary or recurring nature; (2) a covenant containing such words as "duties," "outgoings," "impositions," or "charges" may impose upon a tenant a liability to pay for permanent improvements of the demised premises.

A lease in which a tenant merely covenants to pay his "rent without deduction" cannot be construed as a contract between landlord and tenant which will oust the statutory right of the tenant to deduct the payments referred to in the section. See Home and Colonial Stores v. Tod (1891), 63 L. T. 829, decided under the similarly worded section (s. 96) of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862.

By a local Act commissioners were authorised to flag footways, and the cost thereof was to be paid by the tenants or occupiers of the houses next adjoining. Another clause enabled a tenant to deduct the cost so paid by him out of his rent:—Held, that this charge was within the terms of a covenant in a lease subsequently made, whereby the tenant covenanted to pay all taxes, rates, duties, levies, assessments and payments whatever, which were or during the term might be rated, levied, assessed, or imposed on the premises (Payne v. Burridge (1844), 12 M. & W. 727, followed in Brett v. Rogers, post, p. 194).

Expenses of drainage works done upon premises under the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, were held to be payable by a lessee under a covenant to pay, bear and discharge "all such parliamentary, parochial, county, district, and occasional levies, rates, assessments, taxes, charges, impositions, contributions, burdens, duties and services whatsoever, as during the term should be taxed, assessed, or imposed upon or in respect of the premises or any part thereof" (Sweet v. Seager (1857), 21 J. P. 406; 2 C. B. (N.S.) 119).

The plaintiff demised premises to the defendant for seven years, at the "clear yearly rent" of £90, the latter covenanting to "pay and discharge all taxes, rates, assessments and impositions whatsoever (except property tax) which during the term should become payable in respect of the demised premises." It was held that the tenant was not liable to pay sewerage and paving expenses under a local Act which empowered the local authority to order streets to be sewered and paved by the owners of the adjoining premises, and in case of default of such owners to do the work themselves and to charge the respective owners with their proportionate parts of the expenses thereof. The plaintiff neglected to do the required work, and the authority caused it to be done, and the plaintiff paid his apportioned share. The Court of Common Pleas, distinguishing Sweet v. Seager, supra, held that the payment was not made by the plaintiff for a rate, assessment, or imposition which had become payable in respect of the demised premises, but was in the nature of a penalty for the breach of the duty imposed upon him by the Act of Parliament (Tidswell v. Whitworth (1867), L. R. 2 C. P. 326). This case was followed in Rawlins v. Briggs, post, p. 191, and distinguished in Midgley v. Coppock, post, p. 191.

Tidswell v. Whitworth, supra, was distinguished in the following year. A lessee covenanted that he would, during his term, pay and discharge "all taxes, rates, duties, and assessments whatsoever which during the continuance of the demise should be taxed, assessed, or imposed on the tenant or landlord of the premises demised in respect thereof." It was held that the tenant was liable to pay paving expenses charged by the vestry against the landlord under the Metropolis Management Acts on the ground that the amount charged was a "duty" imposed upon the owner in respect of the premises within the covenant (Thompson v. Lapworth (1868), L. R. 3 C. P. 149; 32 J. P. 184). This case was distinguished in Rawlins v. Briggs, post, p. 191, and followed in Wix v. Rutson, post, p. 194.

Tidswell v. Whitworth, supra, and Thompson v. Lapworth, supra, are the starting points of two streams of authorities, as to which COLLINS, M.R., in Foulger v. Arding, post, p. 196, said: "The distinction which appears to have been taken between the covenants in Tidswell v. Whitworth and Thompson v. Lapworth, and for some time to have been treated as the cardinal distinction in such cases, was that in the first of those cases there was no reference to any persons upon whom the impositions intended to be covered by the covenant were charged or imposed, whereas, in the second, the covenant spoke of them as imposed 'on the tenant or landlord of the premises demised in respect thereof.' It appears to me that, in the earlier cases which followed, stress was laid on the presence or absence of words of this kind rather than on the words used in the description of the nature of the obligations included in the covenant, and the presence or absence in that description of particular words such as 'duties' or 'outgoings.' Later on greater emphasis appears to have been laid in the cases on the presence of words like 'duties' or 'outgoings' in the description of the obligations included in the covenant than on that of words describing the person or persons on whom they were imposed. Brett v. Rogers (post, p. 194) may be referred to as one of the latter class of cases, the last of which is Farlow v. Stephenson (post, p. 195), where the court no doubt gave effect to the word 'duties' as throwing the obligation on the tenant, though there were no words in the covenant describing the person or persons on whom the duties were imposed."

A landlord's covenant to pay all rates, taxes, tithes, and all other charges payable in respect of the premises, was held not to apply to the cost of cleansing a piece of ornamental water effected under an order in execution of the Nuisances Removal Act, 1855, s. 16 (Bird v. Elves (1868), L. R. 3 Ex. 225; 32 J. P. 694).

A lessee covenanted to pay all outgoings charged on the premises or on the landlord in respect thereof. The lessee, after receipt of a notice, constructed a drain, having arranged with the landlord that he should do so, and that whichever one of them was legally liable should ultimately bear the charge. It was decided that the lessee was liable (Crosse v. Raw (1874), L. R. 9 Ex. 209). This decision was followed in a case where the plaintiff demised premises at a yearly rent "clear of all present and future rates, taxes, and deductions," to the defendants who covenanted to pay the rent, and also to bear and pay all the rates, taxes, and outgoings then payable or thereafter to become payable in respect of the premises. The plaintiff having paid certain paving expenses, sued the defendants for the amount. It was held that the omission of the word "outgoings" in the reddendum clause did not qualify the covenant so as to take it out of the decision in Crosse v. Raw, supra, and that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to recover (Gardner v. Furness Rail. Co. (1883), 47 J. P. 232). Crosse v. Raw, supra, was also approved of by the Court of Appeal in Budd v. Marshall, post, p. 191.

A lessee for a term of twenty-one years covenanted to pay the rent reserved "without any deduction or abatement except land tax and landlord's property tax," and further "to pay and discharge all and all manner of taxes, rates, charges, assessments, and impositions whatever (except as aforesaid) then or at any time or times during the term to be charged, assessed, or imposed on the premises thereby demised, or in respect thereof, or of the said rent as aforesaid, by authocity of Parliament or otherwise howsoever." The lessor, in compliance with a notice received under s. 94 of this Act, executed works necessary to abate a nuisance arising from the bad condition of the drains upon the premises. It was held by the Court of Common Pleas, upon the authority of Tidswell v. Whitworth, supra, and distinguishing Thompson v. Lapworth, supra, that the payment made by the lessor for the works was not a "rate, charge, assessment, or imposition assessed or imposed on the demised premises or in respect thereof," but was made in performance of a duty imposed upon him by the Act of Parliament, and that he was not entitled to call upon the lessee to repay the amount (Rawlins v. Briggs (1878), 3 C. P. D. 368). It should be observed that in this case, s. 257, post, p. 566, was not cited. It is difficult to reconcile this decision with the decision in George v. Coates, post, p. 197, and it must, we think, be regarded as overruled.

Note to
Section 104.

A lease contained covenants to pay the rent clear of all deductions for or in respect of the sewers rate or any other rates, taxes, duties, charges, and assessments whatsoever, whether parliamentary, parochial, or otherwise howsoever, except income tax on rent; and further, that the lessee would at all times bear, pay and discharge the land tax (if any), sewers rate, borough rate, improvement rate, tithes and tithe rent-charge in lieu of tithes, and all other taxes, rates, duties, and assessments whatsoever, whether parliamentary, parochial, or otherwise, which then were, or which at any time or times thereafter during the said term should be taxed, charged, rated, assessed, or imposed on the said premises or any part thereof, or upon the landlord or tenant in respect thereof, or in respect of the said yearly rent, except as aforesaid. There was also a covenant by the lessee to repair. It was held by the Court of Appeal (BAGGALLAY and BRAMWELL, L.JJ., BRETT, L.J., dissenting) that the tenant was liable to repay to the landlord the expense of making good defective drainage on the requirement of the local sanitary authority under the P. H. A., 1875, the expense being a "duty" within the meaning of the covenant (Budd and Another v. Marshall (1880), 5 C. P. D. 481; 44 J. P. 584). This decision was followed by NORTH, J., in In re Bettingham, Melhado v. Woodcock (1892), 9 T. L. R. 48, and by WILLS, J., in Clayton v. Smith (1895), 11 T. L. R. 374. See also In re Robertson and Thorne (1883), 47 J. P. 566, and Smith v. Robinson, post, p. 193.

The plaintiffs bought of the defendant three houses, and by the contract of sale the latter agreed to discharge "all rates, taxes, and outgoings," up to the time of completion. The purchase was completed, and afterwards payment was demanded from the plaintiffs of expenses incurred under a local Act in improving the street in which the houses stood. The work had been done before the houses belonged to the defendant, and at the time of the sale to the plaintiffs neither party knew of the charge. The plaintiffs, having paid the sum demanded, sued the defendant for repayment. It was held, distinguishing Tidswell v. Whitworth, ante, p. 190, that the charge for improving the street was an "outgoing" which the defendant had bound himself to discharge, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover (Midgley and Another v. Coppock (1879), 4 Ex. D. 309; 43 J. P. 683). This case was followed in Tubbs v. Wynne, post, p. 193.

The defendant, on taking a house, covenanted to pay "all rates, taxes, charges, and assessments whatsoever, which now are, or may be, charged or assessed upon the said premises or any part thereof, or upon any person or persons in respect thereof." It was held that paving expenses under s. 150, post, p. 282, were "a charge upon the premises," or "upon a person in respect thereof," so as to entitle the lessor to recover from the defendant the amount of such expenses paid by him (Hartley v. Hudson (1879), 4 C. P. D. 367; 43 J. P. 784).

A lessee for a term of seven, fourteen, or twenty-one years of a house in a new street in the metropolis, covenanted to pay all rates and assessments taxed, rated, charged, assessed, or imposed upon the demised premises, or upon or payable by the occupier or tenant in respect thereof. It was held by the Court of Appeal that the tenant was not liable to repay to the landlord the amount of paving expenses apportioned in respect of the demised house under the Metropolis Management Acts, 1855 and 1862, as it was not charged on the premises, but was charged or imposed by the Acts on the owner in respect of the premises (Allum v. Dickinson (1882), 9 Q. B. D. 632; 47 J. P. 102).

Note to
Section 104.

A tenant of premises in the metropolis agreed to pay "all rates, taxes and assessments payable in respect of the premises during the term." The street in which the premises were was paved by the vestry. It was held by the Divisional Court that the sum assessed upon the owners for their proportion of the expenses of paving the street was not a rate, tax, or assessment within the meaning of the covenant, but a charge imposed upon the owners for the permanent improvement of their property (Wilkinson v. Collyer (1884), 13 Q. B. D. 1 ; 48 J. P. 791).

It should be noticed that in the metropolis, paving expenses are not a charge upon the premises, while they are such a charge in districts subject to the P. H. A., 1875. See s. 257, post, p. 566. It is submitted that this is the true point of distinction between the last two cases and Hartley v. Hudson, ante, p. 191.

By a lease of land in the metropolis the lessee covenanted that he would pay "the tithe or rent-charge in lieu of tithes, land tax (if any), sewers rates, main drainage rates, and all other taxes, rates, impositions, and outgoing whatsoever, then or thereafter to be charged or imposed on or in respect of the said premises, or on any part thereof (except the landlord's property tax)." The lessor having had to pay his share of the cost of paving a new street, sought to recover the amount from the lessee, but MATHEW, J., held that the case was governed by Tidswell v. Whitworth, ante, p. 190, and Rawlins v. Briggs, ante, p. 191, and gave judgment for the defendant (Hill v. Edward, W. N. (1885) 32). It is difficult to reconcile the decision in this case with the later decisions.

A lessee of a house in a new street in the metropolis covenanted to pay "all existing and future taxes, rates, assessments, land tax, tithe, or tithe rent-charge, and outgoing of every description for the time being payable either by the landlord or tenant in respect of the said premises." It was held by the Divisional Court that the owner's proportion of the cost of paving the street was an "outgoing" payable by the lessee under the covenant (Aldridge v. Fearn (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 212). The court pointed out that the words of the covenant in this case were more comprehensive than in Wilkinson v. Collyer or Hill v. Edward, supra.

A testator directed the rents and profits of a leasehold house "after payment of all ordinary outgoing for ground rent, repairs, taxes, expenses of insurance or otherwise," to be paid to his widow for life, and after her death to certain other persons. The trustees of the will, upon notice from the vestry under the Metropolis Management Acts, executed certain drainage works. It was held that the cost of the works was an "outgoing" within the meaning of that term as used in the will, and must therefore be paid by the tenant for life (Re Crawley, Acton v. Crawley (1885), 28 Ch. D. 431 ; 49 J. P. 598). See, however, as to this later cases in note (c), ante, p. 187.

By an agreement for a lease of a house for three years at a rent of £75 per annum, the tenant agreed "to pay all sewers rates, tithe rent-charge, land tax (if any) and all existing and future rates, taxes, assessments, and outgoing of every description payable by landlord or tenant in respect of the premises during the tenancy (except the landlord's property tax)." The local board made a claim upon the landlord and tenant for the amount of paving expenses apportioned in respect of the house. It was held that the words of the agreement were wide enough to cover this payment, and that their meaning could not be regarded as altered because the agreement was only for a term of three years. It was held, therefore, that the tenant must pay the amount claimed by the board (Batchelor v. Bigger (1889), 60 L. T. 416).

The plaintiffs were tenants of a house under a lease from the defendant, by which a rent of £40 was reserved "to be paid without deduction, except landlord's property tax, by equal quarterly payments, free and clear from all deductions for main drainage and sewer rates, metropolitan and local improvement rates, taxes, land tax, tithe rent-charge and commutation in lieu of tithes," and the lessees covenanted to pay "the said yearly rent of £40 at the times and in manner aforesaid, free and clear of all deductions, except as aforesaid," and to pay and discharge during the said tenancy all main drainage and sewer rates, etc. (following the words of the reservation). The vestry required the defendant, as owner of the premises, to construct a drain into the common sewer under the Metropolis

Management Act, 1855, s. 73, and the defendant not complying, did the work themselves, and recovered the costs, £17 17s., from the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs deducted this amount from their next half-year's rent, and upon the defendant threatening to distrain, brought an action for an injunction to restrain him. It was held that the payment in question was not within the express covenant in the lease (Home and Colonial Stores v. Tod (1891), 63 L. T. 829). It has already been pointed out that the covenant to pay the rent "without deduction" could not be construed as a contract between landlord and tenant to exclude the tenant's right to deduct this payment from his rent. See p. 189, ante.

Note to
Section 104.

A tenant covenanted to pay all rates, taxes, and assessments whatsoever which then were or during the said term should be imposed or assessed upon the demised premises or the landlord or tenant in respect thereof by authority of Parliament or otherwise, and also to make, uphold, support, cleanse, and repair, and keep in repair, all sewers, drains, cesspools, necessaries, privies, vaults, and other easements belonging to the demised premises. The local authority served on the mortgagee in possession (as the owner) a notice requiring him to abate a nuisance arising from pumping sewage from a cesspool, and on the owner's default, did the work. The owner paid the expenses under threat of legal proceedings, and brought an action to recover them from the tenant. A. L. SMITH, J., held that the tenant was not liable under either covenant (Lyon v. Greenhow (1892), 8 T. L. R. 457).

A lessee covenanted to pay, bear and discharge all land tax, sewers rate, main drainage rate, and all other rates, taxes, assessment charges, or impositions whatsoever, parliamentary, parochial, or otherwise, taxed, charged, assessed, or imposed upon the demised premises, or on the lessor for or in respect of the premises. He also covenanted to repair, but failed to do so, in consequence of which a drain on the premises got out of order, and caused a nuisance. The sanitary authority made an order on the lessor, under the P. H. A., 1891, to abate the nuisance. The lessor incurred expenses in complying with this order and sued the lessee for the amount:—Held (approving In re Bettingham, Melhado v. Woodcock, ante, p. 191), that the expenses so incurred were a charge imposed on the lessor in respect of the premises, and that the lessor was entitled to recover (Smith v. Robinson, [1893] 2 Q. B. 53; 58 J. P. 73).

Freehold messuages were devised to trustees, their heirs and assigns, upon trust, to permit A. and B. during their joint lives, and the survivor of them during his life, to hold the same, and receive the rents, and after the death of the survivor, upon trust for the first and other sons of B. successively in strict settlement. During the life of one of the equitable tenants for life, the trustees applied certain capital moneys held by them upon similar trusts in payment of expenses incurred for drainage works in respect of the devised messuages, which were without sufficient drains as specified in the P. H. A., 1848, s. 49:—Held, that the trustees were "owners" within the meaning of that Act, and had rightly paid the drainage expenses in question out of the capital moneys; but that as between the tenant for life and the remainderman the capital moneys so applied must be treated as a charge upon the property. By a clause in his will the testator declared that the parties beneficially entitled to the rents and profits of any of his houses should keep the same in good and absolute repair:—Held, that these drainage works were not repairs within the meaning of that clause (Re Barney, Harrison v. Barney, [1894] 3 Ch. 562). See also note (c) on p. 187, ante.

By conditions of sale of land within the metropolis the date fixed for completion was May 8th, all outgoing up to that date being cleared up by the vendor. Before May 8th a magistrate made an order to take down dangerous structures on the land. This order was not complied with, and after May 8th, the county council took down the structures and demanded and received from the purchaser the expenses of so doing. It was held, following Midgley v. Coppock, ante, p. 191, that the liability having been incurred before May 8th, the expenses were "outgoings" which the purchaser was entitled to recover from the vendor (Tubbs v. Wynne, [1897] 1 Q. B. 74). This decision was followed in Barsht v. Tagg, post, p. 195. See also In re Highett and Bird's Contract, [1903] 1 Ch. 287, and the observations on this case by ROMER, L.J., in In re Allen and Driscoll's Contract, [1904] 2 Ch. 226; 68 J. P. 469.

Note to
Section 104.

A lessee covenanted to pay "the land tax, sewers rate, and all other taxes, rates, duties, assessments, and impositions, parliamentary, parochial, or otherwise, which now are or shall at any time during this demise be assessed or imposed on or in respect of the said demised premises or of the rent hereby reserved (landlord's property tax only excepted)." It was held by the Divisional Court, following Payne v. Burrige, ante, p. 189, that the tenant was liable to pay drainage expenses incurred by the lessor in complying with the requirement of the vestry under the P. H. (London) A., 1891. The obligation imposed upon the lessor to take up a defective drain and lay a new one, was a "duty" imposed on the lessor in respect of the demised premises (Brett v. Rogers, [1897] 1 Q. B. 525). This decision was approved and followed in Farlow v. Stevenson, post, p. 195.

A tenant of premises outside the metropolis covenanted to pay "all rates, taxes, and assessments whatsoever, which now are, or during the term shall be, imposed or assessed upon the premises, or the landlords or tenants in respect thereof, by authority of Parliament or otherwise, except the landlord's property tax." CHANNELL, J., held that the lessee was not liable to pay paving expenses recovered in a summary manner from the owner under s. 150, post, p. 282 (Baylis and Another v. Jiggins and Another, [1898] 2 Q. B. 315).

The decision in the last-mentioned case was followed by the Divisional Court in Lumby v. Faupel (1903), 88 L. T. 562; 67 J. P. 202, where it was held that a landlord who had paid paving expenses under s. 150, post, p. 282, could not recover from a tenant whose covenant was "to pay all rates, taxes, and assessments whatsoever which now are or during the said term shall be imposed or assessed upon the said premises." On appeal this decision was affirmed, but on another ground, viz., that upon which Surtees v. Woodhouse was decided. See that case, post, p. 197, and also Lumby v. Faupel (in the Court of Appeal) cited therewith.
